When it said that no progress has been made in correcting business abuses, just look at the present condition of rebates.

Uncle Sam will not adopt a policy of excessively high tolls at Panama after spending $400,000,000 on the canal. The disposition to be liberal is already established.

Political reform is all right, but neither of the big parties will ever become so good that it can dispense with a campaign fund sufficient to advertise the issues and the candidates.

At last we are to have a limited beginning with a parcels post system of delivery of mercantile packages. It is called an "experiment," but it is not. The experiment was made in other countries long ago.

DENNING REGARDS BOXING AS JOKE

Welterweight Says Fistic Game Is Easier Than Pounding Iron.

HOW HE BECAME SCRAPPER.

Learned Ring Game in Bouts During Lunch Hour at the Foundry—Expects to Be Hailed as Champion Some Day. Tells of His First Fight.

Most boxers look upon their profession as a very serious occupation, but Jack Denning, the New York welterweight, who recently fought a draw with Mike Gibbons in Gotham, is a glaring exception to the rule. Jack thinks fighting is a huge joke, especially when compared to his former mode of earning a living.

"Pounding iron in a foundry is no joke; thumping an opponent with a pair of boxing gloves is so amusingly funny that it's really a big joke. To me there's nothing furnishes the same amount of fun and entertainment that the boxing game does," said Denning as he ordered an extra platter of eggs at a hotel in New York recently.

Perhaps Denning's idea that even fighting is only a joke may have something to do with the fact that his friends all call him "Laughing Jack." He is fond of boxing principally because of the amusement it furnishes him. The business end has not received Jack's attention until within the last twelve months and then only because he has a big family on his hands.

Denning has been fighting only three years, but today he is considered to be one of the most promising welterweights in the country. He is a very clever boxer, who can hit as hard as any of the men in that class today. It wouldn't be surprising if he goes to the top and wins the title.

But for Denning's story of how he drifted into the fighting business. It's interesting because it shows how comparatively easy a man succeeds who keeps on plugging.

"When I was a kid of twelve my father died. It was up to me to hustle, and I took the first thing that came my way. It happened to be a job in an iron foundry pounding iron all day. At first the work was terribly hard, but when I began to realize that it was making me strong I stuck with it. Foundry work is no joke, particularly to a kid, and I was looking around for something to amuse myself with during the short noon hour. In one of the neighboring back yards several of the men gathered and put on the gloves. Soon I was at it with the larger fellows," said Denning.

Learn's During Lunch Hour. "Some way I seemed to box well without much effort. In a short while the men in the foundry brought in clever fellows who knew the game to box me during the lunch hour. I learned many little tricks of the craft.

"One day in 1908 I was asked over to the new West Side Athletic club in New York to box. In those days the club was considered the toughest school of fighting in the world. If a fellow got away with all the men in his class he'd be stacked up against heavier men. The process would be continued until some one received a good trimming.

"I made a hit at the club. Every heavyweight they put up against me I outboxed, and they decided to send me to the national championships held that year in Boston. There I won the amateur lightweight title.

"Four months later I decided I'd try the professional game.

"At last I got on a bout at a stag held in one of the clubs in Gotham. The manager warned me there'd be no purse unless there was a quick knockout, and at the bell I tore after the big fellow who was my opponent. I believe it was in the third round that I put over the knockout.

"There was a terrible banging at the locked doors, and a second later half a dozen cops broke into the place. They hustled that stag party into the patrol wagon, the fighters going first. We were arrested, and it was my first attempt at fighting for money. I laughed and laughed. It was terribly funny.

"As we bobbed under the light at the corner the fellow I'd knocked out was sprawled on the floor of the wagon. Eyes that was funny. In a couple of minutes he came to and asked, 'Oh, where am I?' Somebody told him he was riding in a wagon. 'I've been knocked out hundreds of times, but I never came to joy riding before,' he replied. He was an amusing fellow, believe me.

"Well, I went along fighting and working in the foundry until a year ago. Since then I have been very successful. 'I expect to be the welterweight champion some day. At present I have to fight middleweights, but gradually I hope to see the welterweight situation cleared up, with me at the top of the class and holding the title.'

Wife of England's Premier Is an Enthusiastic Skater

MRS. HERBERT ASQUITH, wife of the prime minister of England, is one of the women who are credited with a large share in the political success of their husbands. Before she became the second wife of the middle aged cabinet minister, who was not then marked for the first place in the British government, she was Margot Tennant, famous as one of the two or three most brilliant women in London society and, the story goes, the original of Dodo in E. F. Benson's once popular novel of the same name. It has been charged against her that she has forced the grave parliamentarian she married too much into the whirl of smart society, but her influence as a political hostess is admitted even by her critics. Mrs. Asquith is an expert skater and takes great pleasure in her favorite winter sport when she visits Switzerland. Our photograph shows her on the rink at Muerren, one of the well known Alpine resorts.

A Scientific Love Remedy

By F. A. MITCHEL

Ethan Pinckney, a patient in hospital, had been operated on, a bit of bone having been removed that pressed upon his brain. He had enlisted for the Spanish war at sixteen. A shot had grazed his head, and six or seven years afterward he began to lose the sight of his right eye. Trepanning was recommended.

A few days later Mr. Peter Pinckney, the patient's father, called on Professor Gaugier of the Institute for Original Research and said: "Professor, I wish to state a case to you. My son having been trepanned and the surgeon having removed a small lump on the brain, the patient on recovery has changed toward a young lady to whom he was betrothed. On going into the hospital he bid her good-bye with every evidence of affection. When she called to see him after the operation he treated her no more affectionately than any other girl. Do you think this change was brought about by the operation?"

"I certainly do. Our experiments in this institution on monkeys have told us that the phrenology practiced some years ago had a grain of truth in it. There are tiny lumps in the brain which are the seat of animal faculties on human beings, but have been able to destroy in monkeys a predisposition to certain peculiarities by removing corresponding lumps in the brain. I can cite a case where two monkeys had a great affection for each other. I removed a tiny protuberance from the brain of one of them, and after that he would have nothing to do with the other, repelling her whenever she approached him. I do not doubt that the lump in your son's brain which stood for his love for this particular young lady was taken out when he was trepanned."

"We are all much troubled about the matter," pronounced the father. "We were pleased with the match. The young lady is a lovely girl, and she is heartbroken over her lover's change. Does science admit of any restoration of my son's previous condition toward her?"

"Not directly. I have a theory of my own, however, that might, if put in practice, bring about a new condition that would be practically the same as before."

"I would like to hear it."

"The brain is responsive to impressions from without. The little lump removed from your son's head was produced by his mind dwelling on the lady with whom he had fallen in love. I would advise you to throw him and her together, excluding any other woman. His thoughts, presented from feeling toward her, will be the same as before."

Heavy Gamblers. It is said that George IV. lost £800,000 at cards before he saw his twenty-first birthday, and one is not surprised when one reads the gambling chronicles of the time in which he lived. At Almack's, we are told, it was quite a common thing to stake £5,000 on a single card at faro and for £100,000 to be won and lost in a night. Of the mad gambling at White's club many remarkable stories are told—such as how one player lost his entire fortune of £150,000 at a sitting and when the last card fell against him produced a pistol and before a hand could be raised to prevent him put a bullet into his brain.—London Ansvers.

Problem Today Is High Cost of Selling Farm Products

By BENJAMIN F. YOAKUM, Chairman of St. Louis and San Francisco Railroad

LAST year's agricultural products were worth $9,000,000,000 to the farmers. The government used farm values in getting figures for this total. Assuming that the farmers kept one-third of the products for their own use, the consumers paid more than $12,000,000,000 for what the producers received $6,000,000,000. The cost of getting the year's products from producers to consumers amounted to the enormous sum of $7,000,000,000. The real problem to deal with is not high cost of living. It is HIGH COST OF SELLING. In the last twenty-five years our agricultural exports have increased 60 per cent, while our commercial exports have increased nearly 400 per cent. This is certainly a BAD SHOWING FOR THE FARMERS.

ADVANCED METHODS IN HANDLING THE BUSINESS OF THE FARM ARE BOUND TO COME. WHAT WE MUST REALIZE IS THE COST OF DELAY. WE HAVE ALREADY WAITED TOO LONG. WE SHOULD NOW WORK FOR PROMPT IMPROVEMENT IN MARKETING FACILITIES. ALL WELL MANAGED CREAMERIES PROPERLY LOCATED ARE PROFITABLE. IN MOST CASES THE CREAMERY IS THE FIRST STEP IN CO-OPERATION OR NEIGHBORHOOD MARKETING. CO-OPERATION IN MARKETING FRUITS, VEGETABLES, GRAIN, COTTON AND OTHER PRODUCTS IS JUST AS SURE OF SUCCESS WHEN PRACTICED UNDER CORRECT BUSINESS RULES.

The strong so called trust organizations have TAUGHT US A LESSON OF DISTRIBUTION. They have shown us that one executive head can direct the distribution of a commodity where under old methods it required hundreds of men.
