Heart to Heart Talks.

By EDWIN A. NYE.

A New York man of appreciation favors the building of a monument to Eve, the first woman. Why not?

No woman was more deserving First of all, she was doomed for her natural life to live with Adam, the man who hid behind his wife's petticoats, so to speak. Also-

She was as progressive as any suffragist. Knowing that the penalty for eating was wisdom, "she took of the fruit thereof and did eat." She was the beginning of wisdom

Before Adam, slow moving, even ventured to pluck the fruit she chose wisdom. And in real wisdom have her daughters outrun their brothers. Also she was generous.

She divided the apple-and the consequences-with Adam. She might have eaten and kept her secret, leading her ignorant swain around by the nose. "But she gave also to him, and he did eat," which, my brothers, was-A narrow escape.

Above all else. Eve accepted the situation as it was without whimpering or excuse. And she patiently accepted try butter, 25c to 30c; fancy dairy, the place of scapegoat. Adam whined to the Almighty, "The woman thou gavest to be with me, she gave me of the tree, and I did ent." The woman!

It has been the way of all the sons of Adam-laying the blame for the family on the frail shoulders of Eve. She did what she thought to be the best thing for the family. She was tired of living in a fool's paradise, where the family never would amount to anything. And when she gave the family a chance, to say the least, it was ungrateful, And she?

Without whining about the lost Eden she started a combined tailor shop and dressmaking establishment and fixed up the family wardrobe. *

It was the way of a woman, Before Adam knew where he "was at" her quick wits noted the family needs, and her quick fingers fashioned the best garments she could provide on short notice.

Let the monument rise. I am but a mere man, but I am quite willing to contribute my share, for I confess to an ardent admiration for my primitive mother.

Folke E. Brandt Fights a Thirty Year Burglary Sentence

HAT promises to become a "celebrated case" is that of Folke E. Brandt, a young Swede, who a few weeks ago had never been heard of by the public outside of New York city and had for the most part been forgotten there. He had been a servant in the house of Mortimer L. Schiff, a wealthy New York banker, and four years ago was sentenced to thirty years hard labor for burglary in the first degree, to which he pleaded guilty before Judge Rosalsky. The offence was committel in the house of his former employer, whom he is also said to have assaulted. Brandt, who was under age when he was arrested, alleges through his accorney that he was allowed by the presiding judge to plead guilty to a crime which, according to the evidence heard in the case, he did not commit. Strenuous efforts have recently been made to have his sentence commuted or to have a new trial granted, and as a preliminary he was released from Dannemora prison on a writ of habeas corpus and brought to New York to appear in the court proceedings instituted in his behalf. Judge Rosalsky has permitted him to withdraw his plea of "guilty" and to enter one of "not guilty." Our illustration shows Brandt (whose position is indicated by the arrow) on his way from the prison to the train.

wife he would have always been to be married to a girl who gave every evidence that she had singled him out above all other men to love.

Both lived on the Atlantic coast, and shortly before the wedding Hengaret Stone, that his presence in San as well as in Oregon, would hold while Francisco was required in the matter of certain interests he had there, for he was well off and lived on his income. Miss Stone was poor. When he left her he seemed queasy about something, and the lady begged him not to go, averring that she had a foreboding that something would hap pen to him. Henderson hesitated. He thought be might settle the matter in the west by correspondence. But he concluded to go, and the lovers parted with mutual forebodings.

Two weeks later Margaret Stope re ceived a telegram from her fiance that he was very III, but instructed her not to come to him. The next day shere ceived a message from an intimate friend of his who had gone west with him stating that Henderson was dead. The friend would bring the body east. In due time a letter came from the friend, Ian Gregory, that Henderson had requested before his death that to 12c; spring, 10c to 11c, and roosters his body be interred without ceremony and that she should not be present.

Margaret was much shocked, but she bore up nobly under the misfortune. She carried out Henderson's instructions to the letter, omitting to be present during the interment. Gregory when he arrived called upon her. and it was arranged that the two should go together to Henderson's grave. Margaret carried plants with her and put them in the ground so that they would grow over the grave.

She found in Gregory a sympathetic friend. He was extremely deferential, always maintaining a delicacy due to one who has experienced a great grief. She found it difficult to get him to talk of Henderson's last illness. Whenever she mentioned the subject be turned the conversation in other channels, intimating that it was a mournful topic that they would both do well

The two made several trips together to the cemetery to note the growth of the plants and put flowers on Henderson's grave, but Gregory seemed to shrink from going there, and the last time they went together he acted so the effort to have the "County High strangely that Margaret did not sug-School Fund Law", placed upon the gest his going again. He grew moody ballot at the general election next and discontented. At times he showed signs of taking the place made vacant by her fiance; at other times he acted as if he would consider such an act a betrayat of friendship. Margaret could not understand him. Any mystery in one with whom we are thrown intimately begets an interest, and since that interest with Margaret was in fluenced by demonstrations of a growing love for her, she found berself thinking a great deal of Gregory. One who has lost a love naturally craves to replace that love.

But the more closely they grew together the more Gregory hung back, Henderson was always straining to and it became evident that something know something that there was no was weighing on his mind. Margaret need for him to know. If he had had tried gently to induce him to confide in her, but the bare mention of such a river interests at Stockton that wondering if she were really devoted thing seemed to wear upon him dread fully. Believing that he was suffer ing from qualms at taking his friend's place in her heart, she exercised a frankness which would otherwise have been unmaidenly to convince him that there was no reason to reproach him-

The misunderstanding between them had reached a climax when one even ing while they were together ther was a ring at the doorbell and who should be ushered into the drawing room but Henderson himself.

Now, it is not to be supposed that any one of the three under the cir cumstances maintained any steadines of demeanor. Henderson and Gregory both looked as if they had been caugh stealing. Through Margaret there ran a tumult of emotions. For awhile there was an oppressive silence. Then Margaret essayed to speak, but her voice failed her. Henderson spoke in

You have per Betrated this deception in connection with Mr. Gregory to learn whether I would be true to your memory in the way you would wish me to be true Mr. Gregory consented to lend himself to your experiment. In one sense it has been successful, since it has brought a definite result. Had I not been deceived I would have married him both for love and to supply the void in my heart made vacant by your death. As it is, you have ruined yourselves and have ruined me. Caterpillars of Sikkim, The sal-tree forest of Sikkim, in In dia, in the tropical gorge of the Teesta is one of the breeding grounds of the myriad butterflies that swarm over the country. A traveler says that in May and until the middle of June the tender leaves of the numerous trees are literally alive with voracious caterpillars. The presence of these caterpillars in such overwhelming numbers is explained by the fact that they are distasteful to birds. Fowls that were offered them rejected them after a trial with disgust and went on wiping their bills for some time afterward. # GOTCH'S TITLE IS SAFE FOR AWHILE

World's Champion Wrestler Uses Mahmout as Buffer

HE STAVES OFF CHALLENGERS

Offers to Back Bulgarian Against Any Mat-Artist In World-If Turk Is Defeated Gotch Will Give His Conqueror Chance at the Title.

Almost every country in the world where wrestling exists as a sport has a representative in this country after the world's title. When Frank Gotch snatched the crown from Hackenschmidt several years ago it shifted the hat center of the world from Europe to America.

Now the ambitious Greco-Roman and catch-as-catch-can titans are flocking to this country. England is about the only nation of importance that has not contributed to the colony here. There are Samsons and Siegfrieds from Germany, Pedersens from Scandinavia, Padoubnys from Russia, Zbyscos from Galicia, Karlas from India, Courderelles from Turkey, Romanoffs from the steppes and a veritable horde of unspeakable and Balkan wonders. But they are all here in vain. Champion Gotch is intrenched with his title, with a buffer between himself and any ambitious aggressors.

Gotch has consummated one of the eleverest coups ever worked in the history of the mat game. He has out witted both promoters and wrestlers aspiring to a return match and the big gate money that such a contest would net them. Gotch has the Bulgarian Yusuf Mahmout under contract, and thus he is enabled to stave off all challengers while touring the country. He is in a position finally to hand over the title to the great Turk grappler when he chooses to make such a move.

"Mahmout can defeat any of these wrestlers clamoring for a match with me," said Gotch. "I have Mahmout under contract, and I am willing to back him against any wrestler."

Gotch tried to force Hackenschmidt to meet Mahmout. The world's champion insisted at that time that the Turk could defeat the "Russian Lion" in a finish match. Mathmout at that time was under another management, and the men moreting flackenschmidt re
