GOLF POPULAR WITH BALL STARS

Ancient Scottish Game Now Part of Spring Training. ATHLETICS SET THE FASHION.

Two Years Ago Members of Philadelphia Team Took Up Game and Since Then Have Won Two World's Championships, So Other Clubs Have Followed Suit.

Some of these days the daily stories from the spring training camps of the major league baseball clubs will not tell how many home runs Frank Baker hit or how many men G. Cleveland Alexander struck out. They will instead relate how Eddie Collins or Big Chief Bender did the eighteen hole golf course in eighty strokes and Charley Doolin won six fast sets of tennis.

Several years ago a major league manager required work in the south, and the player who put in the greatest number of the twenty-four hours each day in strenuous pitching, batting, fielding and running was most sure of a permanent berth. But times have changed, and now a player does about as he pleases—that is, so long as he is actually trying to get into shape for the season's campaign. And among the most popular sports is golf.

The Athletics set the fashion for the new spring training two years ago and since that time have won two American league pennants and two world's championship series. Is it any wonder that Manager John McGraw has a similar campaign for the New York Giants and other leaders have already decided that baseball is not the only game which can be used to good advantage to get players into condition?

Two years ago—in the spring of 1910—Manager Mack announced that the veterans on the team would start training at Hot Springs, Va. This created surprise, for the climate there is not much different from that in Philadelphia during early March. And the other American league managers smiled still more when they read each day how the Mack players were spending their time learning the ancient game of golf, with an occasional glimpse of a baseball to become accustomed to its weight.

Later the veterans went to Atlanta, Ga., where they did find warm weather, but even there they took things easy, frequently going to the Country club in the morning to play golf instead of to the baseball park. Few of the men went through the old program of "work, work, work," from morn till night.

Last spring the veterans took life even easier at Hot Springs, Va., and Savannah, Ga. Manager Mack did not bring a bunch of athletes to Philadelphia who were trained to the minute and ready to jump into the ring and fight sixty pounds. They started the season as if they were going to finish in last place. But they developed as the season progressed, and when the other teams, with players trained so fine that they felt by the wayside during the warm weather, dropped back gradually, Mack's men slowly forged to the front until they finally reached their true form in July and August, when the games counted most.

SHAPING DESTINY. No man can do his work well, as well as he can, year in and year out, and not be hacking and hewing at something more implacable than wood or stone and not be shaping something more durable than iron or steel, even his own character, his own spiritual destiny.

The Roman Legion. Ten cohorts of 600 men each, with a wing of 300 cavalry, was the ordinary composition of a Roman legion.
