United States Troops Are Guarding the Rio Grande

Photos by American Press Association

WING to the reports of widely scattered uprisings against the Madero government in Mexico, it has again become necessary for the United States military authorities to take measures for the guarding of the Texas frontier. General J. W. Duncan has his entire command of 5,000 men disposed along the Rio Grande ready to take such steps as may be deemed necessary to protect Americans on either side of it, but strict orders have been issued that under no circumstances are the United States troops to invade Mexico. Camping in the open after the fashion illustrated in the lower picture is pleasant enough now in the mild Texas climate, but what the soldiers chiefly dread is the continuation of guard duty until the warm weather, of which most of them had experience while the last revolution was in progress. Health conditions in the Texas camps, however, are good even in hot weather because of the excellent modern sanitary arrangements which now prevail. Typhoid fever, for example, has been eliminated through the vaccination of the troops and the establishment of refuse destructors and the consequent absence of files. The upper photograph is of General Duncan and high staff. The figure of the general is indicated by a cross

C. K. G. Billings, owner of Lou Dillon and Uhlan, tells a good one on himself in regard to the first horse he ever purchased. When Billings was a mere youth he bought a nice looking mare at a stockyards, paying the stiff price of $600 for the privilege of being her owner. The mare was a hard one to beat on the road, but a model in manners. Naturally young Billings took his father riding behind his new pet, and the old gentleman, a horseman to the backbone, soon saw his son had a treasure "What did you give for her?" he asked.

The son had no notion of telling that $600 story, so he divided the real price by three.

"Huh," said the elder Billings after a moment's cogitation, "I'll give you $100 profit and take her myself," which he did. The younger Billings was stung, as he was forced either to let the mare go at 50 cents on the dollar or to admit to his father that he had been untruthful in regard "Oh, wait a minute, till I get my to the cost.

> Since that time, when he made the trip to the stockyards and strained his ready means to pay $600 for that mare, Billings has invested about $300,000 in pleasure horses.
