IS AT STANDSTILL

The potato market is at a complete standstill so far as buying in the country is concerned. While a nominal amount of extra fancy has been taken recently as high as $1.60 yer cental, dealers as a rule are not trying to buy at any price

Ben Jaggar, the kell known Portland potato buyer, who has just returned from an investigation of the California markets says that the situation there is much warse than anticipated here. 'As soon as I saw the great amount of stuff that was being held on the tracks at Los Angeles,' he says, "I wired my house here not to ship any more in that direction as the market was in very poor shape.

"There is plenty of stock in Cali-fornia at this time to supply the trade tion. there for some time, therefore no early improvement if any, can be anticipated in the situation.'

Other buyers who have been heavy purchasers up to the last few weeks are trying to unload with as little delay as possible. Few have any idea farmers of Beaver Creek, transacted that the market will do much during the remainder of the season. The Richest Man In Mexico And His Granddaughters

HE richest man in Mexico, General Luis Terrazas, typifies conditions which caused the Madero revolution and underlie the present rebellion He and members of his family own the greater part of the state of Chihuahua, the business and politics of which they have controlled for more than fifty years. Terrazas was one of the lieutenants of Diaz and was rewarded for driving the French out of his state by the gift of the governorship under the dictator. He used his opportunities so well that he amassed a for tune of (some say) $150,000,000 gold. He owns 15,000,000 acres of land, which the rebels-like the Madero revolutionists before them-want to see confiscated or sold on terms that will give the common people a chance to have farms of their own instead of existing merely as peons or laborers Eurique C. Creel, former governor of Chihuahua and at one time ambassador to the United States, himself a very wealthy man, is a son-in-law of Terrazas The photo graph here reproduced is of the general, now more than eighty years old, and his granddaughters, Senoritas Urneta (seated) and Laghet (standing).
