there was a suspicion of foul play. "I shall take my son's body home, and give it an Indian burial," said the father to Mr. Cross, who assisted him in having it exhumed. "We loved Henry and he was a good boy. We never could rest if we knew he was buried so far away."

A large party of Indians that were with the Hennings when the young man disappeared are again camped at Gladstone, and will remain there several days. An instance of how the aborigines in this section are becoming exterminated was revealed when Mr. Cross asked one of the old women where the five babies were that accompanied the party last year.

"Dead," was the reply. "They died of the whooping cough when we were 1862-Battle of Mechanicsville or Bea- going home last year. We have no more bables-too bad.'
