"The Evolution of the Schoolma'm"

Those of us who remember her of more than 25 years ago cannot help looking at her modern successor with wonder and a little of the suspicion with which the old regard the new. How faintly she tripped upon the country lane toward the white school house to begin her day's work! There was nothing in her appearance to distinguish her from the ordinary country lass except the thoughtful brow betokening deeper incursions in the realm of learning. If her wider mental reach impressed her with a sense of superiority among the youth of the land she certainly was too well bred to vent it in words.

At that time and fashions could not enter through the sacred portals of the school house. Studies were not obscured and colored by the fripperies of so called embellishment. Arithmetic consisted in clear statements of the relation between numbers; grammar was a plain elucidation of the principles of language; and spelling was held in such high esteem that perfection in it was an object of pride to young and old. All methods bore the stamp of the directness and the common sense of that generation.

The influence of the school ma'm was not limited by the walls of the school room. Her authority in matters of learning was supreme in the community. In a dispute about points in obtruse knowledge she was the oracle to know the truth. She was also credited with a keen discernment of the nicer proprieties of life among her sex, and as a moral light she stood not far below the minister.

Despite all this, she did not deem it beneath her dignity to be on the look out for "the right man" to pop the question so interesting to the feminine mind. And when he came she gracefully accepted him and stepped from her pedestal to perform the duties of the housewife which were not drudgery because she did not think they were. She had reason for accepting the shelter of a home. Never could she hope to build one of her own efforts, for though her wages were equal to those of a good hired man, teaching usually was limited to the winter months. Happily she looked for her chief reward in the growth and fruition of the seeds she conscientiously sowed.

Why the modern teacher (she reverts the name schoolma'm) receives at least double the pay of the present hired man is seldom explained at this age when most of us are either too busy or too lazy to search for causes. It certainly is not justified by results. The standard of intelligence has not risen. The young generation swallows patent medicine, and is fleeced at bargain counters and by political grafters even more than was the old. But the teacher, at any rate is an up to date woman. Intelligent rather than intellectual, world-wise rather than book-wise. She may be looked upon as the embodiment of woman's new won independence. Whether a suffragette at heart or not she is too shrewd to pose as one. Moreover she knows that additional rights and authority mean additional duties and responsibility, and that woman can get more by asking than by demanding. Like most of us nowadays the teacher measures the reward for her labor chiefly by the figure on her monthly check and we cannot blame her for being like the rest of us.

Whatever may be her faults, she never lacks politeness nor does she disdain the other sex. She would even consent to marry one if there were any personal gain in the transaction. But it is clear as moon-light that the average man is her inferior in intelligence and in earning power, and what woman who is able to stand alone would lean upon someone less strong than herself? But her mother was married and all her grandmothers before her up to Eve. Some how it runs in the family and heredity is a mighty force. Let us wait and see.

Four Spiders to the Pound.

The lizard spider (Meius mygale) is the largest species of venomous spider known. He is of a bright yellow color with three red stripes on his back and a crescent of pure black on the abdomen. Full grown specimens of the lizard spider (so called because his chief food is small lizards, frogs, etc.) measure four inches across the back and have legs ten inches long. Four full grown males collected by a British exploring expedition weighed one pound four ounces. This giant of the spider family is a native of Ceylon.
