A blind man was given a picnic in a fine grove near Oregon City. He is a deserving man. A periodical praised the man for being blind but lambasted the picnic. Down with breweries whether going or coming! East-side or Westside we'll fight just the same. Why is rent?

In its first plank the Democratic platform declares that a protective tariff is unconstitutional. Then the platform multiplies words on the subject, trying to hedge. Only the Democratic party could think to compromise on a violated constitution.

An Infernal Gift

By EUNCE G. SUMMERS

Miss Martindale, looking over the morning paper, remarked to her mother:

"Dear me, so I am to be married! Listen to this: 'The wedding between Schuyler Van Horn and Helen Martindale will take place on the 15th inst. at St. James' church. Schuyler Van Horn! I'm to get a husband with an aristocratic name anyway.'"

"With so many people in the world," said Mrs. Martindale, "to find names for, it's a wonder there are not a dozen Helen Martindales and as many Schuyler Van Horns."

Miss Martindale said nothing more, scanning the society columns, thus turning to the advertisement of lingerie.

Nevertheless the odd announcement of the forthcoming marriage of one of her own name affixed there. A certain Dick Owens and she had been what is in slang called "spots" for some time, and she thought how would she feel if she saw a matrimonial announcement with the name Owens substituted for Van Horn.

There was no indisposition on the part of Mr. Owens to see his name in print linked with that of Miss Martindale, nor was Miss Martindale herself so indisposed. There was, however, a barrier between them in the person of a certain Martin Wykoop, who had made a great deal of money out of a patent medicine and whose suit was favored by Miss Martindale's father. It was the old story of wealth and all wealth can accomplish against, to say the least, the mediocrity of a small income.

But since this Mr. Wykoop was short, fat, bald and homely and Dick Owens was tall, slender, curly-headed and handsome Miss Martindale, who was too young to look far into the future, infinitely preferred the latter. It was her father who, with the usual matter-of-factness of age and experience, stood in the way of love's young dream.

It was 5 o'clock in the afternoon. Mr. Martindale had come back home from business and was sitting in the library looking at the evening paper. The doorbell rang and an express package was handed in and accepted for it. It was a square parcel about big enough to hold easily a large sized apple, addressed to Miss Martindale. The butler carried it to her room and placed it upon a table before her. She looked at the address and wondered what the package contained, then took up a pair of scissors to cut the string, when she heard a faint ticking. She took the thing up and carried it down into the library.

"Father," she said, "some one, I know not who, has sent me a package, and I can't read a ticking." "Drop it!"

The package fell from Miss Martindale's hands on to the floor, where it lay motionless. Mr. Martindale made a dash for the door and, seizing his daughter's arm as he passed, dragged her with him out of the room, not stopping till he had put a wall between them and the package.

"What do you think it is?" asked Helen. "An infernal machine, of course." "Who sent it?" "Who can't have sent it?" "Your name on it is a find. It was intended for me. There are several reasons why certain persons whose minds I have ignored might send me such a thing. Are you sure you heard it ticking?"

"Certain telephone for the police." "Go and telephone there was another ring at the door, and who should appear but Mr. Dick Owens. "Oh, Dick," called Helen. "Hurry past the library. There's an infernal machine in there. Somebody, I don't know who, sent it to me."

Mr. Owens stood a few moments gazing at Helen and her father, who were in the rear end of the hall, then asked if he might see the thing. Without waiting for a reply he walked into the library, looked at the package lying on the floor, picked it up and put it to his ear. He smiled. Being something of a mechanic he knew that the ticking was too delicate for an infernal machine. It was probably a watch.

He carefully opened it and found that it was a watch—a lady's watch—and with it was a visiting card with the names of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph B. Ward, persons of whom he had never heard. Helen had told him of the wedding announcement, and he inferred at once that it was a wedding gift intended for the other Miss Martindale.

An idea popped into Mr. Owens' head. He would make some capital with Mr. Martindale.

"I'll take the thing home with me," he called, "and disarrange the clock."

WHITMAN AND POLICE CLASH OVER SCHEPPS

NEW YORK, Aug. 19.—Met by a score of policemen who demanded that the prisoner be surrendered to them, District Attorney Charles S. Whitman and his assistant, Robert Rubin, arrived here shortly before noon today with Sam Schepps, who was arrested in Hot Springs, Ark., wanted here in connection with the Rosenthal murder.

Whitman held back the police, and rushing Schepps through the station hurried him to the West Side prison in a taxicab.

Later in the day the district attorney issued a red hot statement, bitterly denouncing the police for "butting in" and declaring that they only manifested interest in the case when men liable to divulge incriminating facts against them were arrested.

With the arrival here of Schepps, Whitman says that he is now ready to go on with the trial of Police Lieutenant Charles Becker. A confession from Schepps, he says, will make complete his chain of evidence against Becker and other police officials.

Becker continues to maintain a defiant attitude and has asked Judge Crain for permission to inspect the evidence against him already presented to the grand jury. Judge Crain will consider Becker's request tomorrow.

Becker, who is alleged to have given money to Schepps to pay the gangsters who murdered Rosenthal, will formally plead to a charge of murder Wednesday.

"Don't," cried Helen, in agony. "You'll be blown sky high," called Mr. Martindale.

Nevertheless Dick went out with the box, and in half an hour a telephone message came.

"Have opened the box and removed the contents. I congratulate you on your escape."

"By Jove!" exclaimed Mr. Martindale. "What a man that Dick Owens is!"

And he forthwith withdrew his objections to Mr. Owens as a son-in-law. Mr. Owens forwarded the wedding gift to its proper destination.

Do You Want to Be A Millionaire? Then Follow This Advice By THOMAS NEACY, a Milwaukee Man of Millions

A MAN MUST BE CLEAN TO WIN. HE MUST BE CLEAN IN MORALS AND IN HONESTY AND CLEAN AS REGARDS TEMPERANCE. THE INTEMPERATE MAN DOES NOT STAND A VERY GOOD CHANCE IN THIS WORLD. IT IS ABSOLUTELY ESSENTIAL THAT YOU, SHOULD YOU BE SEEKING YOUR FORTUNE IN THE BUSINESS WORLD, MUST LOOK THE OTHER WAY FROM IMMORALITY AND LOOSENESS OF CHARACTER IF YOU ARE GOING TO AMOUNT TO ANYTHING. BE PUNCTUAL ALWAYS. Many a time has a great victory been won by punctuality. If you say you are going to meet a man at 8 o'clock, meet him at that time. You would not go to catch a train half an hour after its departing time, would you? And now for the time honored advice—SAVE YOUR MONEY. The saving of money is the foundation upon which you must stand to reach the million mark. If you can show me the man who started with nothing and got anywhere on nothing you'll show me a miracle. A few thousands will get you your start, but YOU MUST HAVE THE MONEY BEFORE YOU CAN DO ANYTHING. WORK IS THE GREATEST THING IN THE WORLD. I haven't had a vacation since I landed in this country. And, for goodness' sake, don't get the notion into your head that the world is too full of men who are capable of holding the big jobs. On the other hand, there is a scarcity of them. There's plenty of room in this world for you if you can SHOW THE WORLD THAT YOU'RE WORTHY
