STATE TAX ROLL SHOWS INCREASE

SALEM, Or., Sept.—That the valuation of the state tax roll for the year will be $900,000,000 is the estimate made by Tax Commissioner Eaton, who has just returned from a tour in southern Oregon, where he conferred with County Assessors relative to tax work. Prior to that he made a tour of eastern Oregon, and his estimate is based on information gathered on the two trips.
"I find that the tax roll will not be increased much," declared State Tax Commissioner Eaton today, in commenting on the situation. "Upon information at hand I estimate that the tax roll will be about $900,000,000. That of last year was $890,000,000, and if my estimate is correct, the roll of this year will exceed that of last year by $10,000,000. The state tax levy last year was 3.40 mills, and this year it will hover around 1.8. There is a law on the statute books providing that assessors shall tax notes and mortgages, but I found a number of assessors who are not attempting to tax this class of property this year. This will result in a decrease of the roll to a considerable extent."
Among other reasons which will contribute to the decrease in the state levy this year is that it will be made prior to the meeting of the legislature, and cannot include the appropriations which will be made. That of last year was made after the adjournment of the legislature and included all appropriations made.

The Avenger

By REGINALD D. HAVEN

"Can you tell me, sir, where I can find the man who killed young Trevor in this place a few weeks ago?"
The inquirer was an elderly man past fifty, who spoke in a modulated voice that indicated the gentleman. He was faultlessly dressed, and everything about him betokened respectability and prosperity. But in his eye was a look—well, it was a look of indescribable melancholy.
"You refer to Jim Hawkins, I 'spec," replied one of a group of men of whom the inquiry was made.
"I don't know his name. I refer to the man who shot and killed young Trevor," replied the gentleman in the same quiet voice.
"You'll probably find him at the Antelope saloon, sir. He's a gambler and has picked up a scab. The Antelope is that yaller building right over there. But don't excite him. Even the sheriff doesn't dare touch him."
"Thank you, gentlemen," and the stranger started for the saloon.
Jim Hawkins was one of those desperadoes who infested the wild west in the days of its wilderness, especially mining towns. Young Trevor, a mining engineer, had gone to the place to examine a mine, had been invited by Hawkins to drink, had declined, and, having persisted in declining, Hawkins shot him dead. Something in the old gentleman's appearance told the man of whom he had made his inquiries that his presence in the town had connection with this murder. It did not occur to them that the mild mannered man had come out to avenge Trevor's death. Indeed, they didn't know what he had come for, but curiosity prompted them to follow him to the Antelope saloon.
Approaching a table where Hawkins had been pointed out to him, he bent down and said in that same soft voice: "Excuse me, sir, for interrupting your game. My name is Trevor. I have come to invite you to have something with me at the bar."
Hawkins looked up, and it seemed to him that the young man whose life he had snuffed out stood before him, only aged. It was as if thirty years had gone by and young Trevor had come back to do by him as he had done by Trevor.
The man bending over him showed no sign of possessing a weapon, but there was a self satisfied look so far as danger was concerned that was more forceful than if he had looked down the barrel of a pistol. Hawkins did not know whether the apparition—as he considered it—could draw a weapon—if he had one—quicker than himself or not. Something told him that the hour of vengeance had come. Under the influence of that melancholy eye he arose from the table, leaving there a pile of coins he had won, and walked side by side with the stranger to the bar.
"Barkeeper," said the newcomer, "set a bottle of whisky before the gentleman and a glass."
The barkeeper filled the order while

Hawkins said:
"I don't drink with no man who don't drink with me."
"You are to drink not with the living, but with the dead. I am but a messenger to do what can only be done in the flesh."
"Whose messenger?"
"Reginald Trevor."
"Oh!"
The stranger facing Hawkins leaned his right elbow on the bar, supporting his cheek with his right hand facing the man he had invited to drink. This brought the former's hand in close proximity to the collar of his coat at the back of his neck.
"Will you drink, sir?"
Hawkins looked as if he didn't know what to do. He raised his hand to take hold of the bottle standing on the bar, and the hand trembled. Every one of those looking on saw it and knew that the stranger had deprived Hawkins of his nerve. They knew it from the fact that he was obeying the stranger as well as by the trembling of his hand. Hawkins poured out some liquor, spilling much of it. Then he slowly placed it to his lips and took it down at a gulp.
"Have another," said the stranger.
But the liquor had brought back Hawkins' courage.
"Not by a—"
The gentleman's hand that had been supporting his cheek clutched at something under his collar at the back of his neck, and the broad blade of a bowie knife glittered before Hawkins' eyes. He started to put his hand to his hip, whereupon the stranger lowered the knife to within an inch of that part of Hawkins' neck that covers the jugular vein.
"Drink!" said the stranger.
Hawkins' hand instead of continuing to his hip grasped the bottle and poured out another drink.
And so the stranger forced him to take one drink after another till all power was gone out of him, when the former turned to the lookers on and said:
"Call the sheriff."
That official, who had not before dared to lay a hand on Hawkins, disarmed him and carried him to the jail.
"Give him the rope tomorrow morning at 6," said the stranger. "He'll be sober by that time."
And the next morning Hawkins was swung off. But the stranger who had captured him did not wait to see him hanged.
A Nice Distinction.
"What is your profession or trade?" asked the lawyer of the witness.
"Well, I'm a kind of carpenter."
"A kind of carpenter, eh? What kind of a carpenter?"
"They call me a jackleg."
"They do? Well, if they call you that you probably are one. Will you please explain to the jury the difference between a jackleg carpenter and a real carpenter?"
"—I can't tell the difference, but I can give an example."
"Well, sir, go ahead."
"It's the same difference as between you and a real lawyer."—St. Paul Dispatch.
If it happened it is in the Enterprise.

Tailored Hat for Fall
Wise is the woman who chooses the always reliable black and white combination or its equally popular rival, navy blue, for the color of her first fall hat. Later, if desired, a hat may be chosen to match the fall suit, but a hat in colors mentioned may be worn with many and never fails to be of service. Such a one is shown in the drawing above, a close fitting shape with brim rolled at the sides and high square crown surrounded by a flat stiffened band of satin and trimmed in front with a flat bow of velvet holding two smart wings.

PRUNE MARKET SLOW; SUPPLY NEAR AVERAGE

Leading prune handlers do not estimate the production of prunes in the Pacific northwest above 12,000,000 to 15,000,000 pounds against a full crop of perhaps 25,000,000 pounds. California is credited this year with a crop of about 200,000,000 pounds, therefore the shortage in the Pacific northwest sinks into insignificance when the total output of the coast is concerned.
Market for prunes at the present time is slow. Buyers are taking hold sparingly on the basis of 6 1/2c for 35s to 40s and 6c for 40s to 45s. The former is practically the largest size produced here this season.
There is an entire lack of demand for prunes from the east. Everone there was badly stung on prunes last season and none care to repeat the performance this year. Mail advices received by handlers indicate that the retail trade is quite well stocked with prunes carried over from last year and even the offering of supplies by coast parties at materially reduced values, fail to influence the buyers.
A cable from Europe stated that buyers there were not anxious to take hold of Pacific coast prunes this season owing to the glutted trade.
Prevailing Oregon City prices are as follows:
DRIED FRUITS—(Buying), Prunes on basis 6 to 8 cents.
