Farmer Needs Instruction In Advanced Farm Methods At Once. By JAMES J. HILL, Railroad Builder of the Northwest

THOSE CONVENTION CONTESTS.

William J. Bryan was in the national Republican convention at Chicago as a newspaper reporter, so that as a matter of business, as well as of politics, he followed closely the evidence and the argument in the case of all the contested delegates. Mr. Bryan is on the stump earnestly supporting Professor Wilson and earnestly opposing President Taft. If Mr. Bryan, the reporter, had learned anything that would help Bryan, the orator, to make a stronger case against President Taft don't you suppose that he would have told it? To put it another way, don't you suppose that if Mr. Bryan believed the nomination for President Taft had been stolen he would be saying so to every audience he addresses? He is not saying so, and is not that fact about as strong evidence as any one should need that the Taft nomination was not stolen? In point of fact, those who have taken the trouble to study the evidence in the contest cases, no matter how strong had been their convictions before doing so that the cases had not been fairly decided, have been forced to the conclusion that there is no ground whatever for the attacks that have been made upon the integrity of the national committee and the convention. If any reader of this is among those who are still under the impression that the contest were not honestly decided he should write to Chicago, Ill., and ask for a copy of that subject. It is a candid statement of an honorable man who heard the testimony in every case and it is absolutely convincing.

Dolls Stuffed With Fortunes.

The Bank of France destroys old notes by placing them in a vat and subjecting them to the action of certain corrosive acids. In a few moments the banknotes are reduced to pulp. This pulp is sold to toymakers, who use it for stuffing their less expensive dolls, so that the plaything of a child may be stuffed with what was once a fortune.

Points for Mothers

Teaching Girls to Cook. Although cookbooks come in rapid succession—so fast, indeed, that it would take a good sized library to house them instead of the modest little shelf that formerly sufficed for the literature of the cuisine—the requirements of the child cook have been somewhat overlooked. One of the most popular features of the public school exhibitions held each year is the demonstration by the little girl cooks from the cooking classes. The leading chefs of the day are invariably to be found in the front ranks of the onlookers on these occasions and are loud in their admiration of the little girls' skill and resourcefulness. Not the least pleasing feature of these displays is the evident delight of the children in their work. Yorkshire puddings are whisked with a will, pastry is proudly rolled out on the floured board and the nicely browned meat taken out of the oven with a grand flourish that arouses the envy of every other child in the room. Nearly every little girl longs to cook something all by herself, if it is only candy or chestnuts over the nursery fire, and too often those responsible for their care, afraid of burned fingers and spoiled frocks, postpone the first cookery lesson until the girl has her time fully taken up with the many interests that have been opened out to the modern schoolgirl and no longer wants to learn how to cook. How the little girl may take the first steps in the art of good cooking is told simply and clearly in language that could be understood by every child. Reading to the Little Ones. Sometimes read to the children, in that lull before bedtime, a few verses or a short poem from some classic that you love. You try to surround your children as far as possible with good pictures, tasteful furnishings and colorings, because you think that early environment educates unconsciously. By the same token listening to and becoming familiar with the best in our language will in the future enable them to reject the mediocre and tawdry in literature, as in material things. Pick up your Tennyson and soothe and quiet them with the dreamy music of the choric song from the "Lotus Eaters." There is sweet music here that softer falls Than petals from blown roses in the grass, or that exquisite lullaby from the "Princess." Sweet and low, sweet and low. Wind of the western sea, or farther on, when their mood is brighter, the spirited bugle song with its stately phrasing and haunting refrain: The splendor falls on castle walls And sunny summits old in story, Or the lilting sound of "The Brook": I chatter over stony ways In little sharps and trebles; I bubble into eddying bays; I babble on the pebbles. Can a child whose ears are attuned to such sounds care for commonplace or trashy in literature? The Man of the House. "I was left alone for a time with my two boys—aged five and three—and until then I had never realized just what an important factor their father had been in their government," said a fond parent. "I had never believed in corporal punishment, and now that the responsibility fell entirely upon me I set myself the task of finding a better method. After several failures I tried this and found it most effective. I had often told the older boy that when his father was away he must be the 'man of the house.' Now, I wrote upon a paper the name of each boy and pinned the paper upon the wall. I explained to them carefully that whenever they were naughty I would put a black mark after their names and whenever they were especially obedient or helpful I would put down a 'round ring.' Then at the end of the day we compared the two, and the one with the best record was the 'man of the house the next day.' "The 'man of the house' was allowed to sit at his father's place and serve the meals. Whenever there were no black marks on the day's record I gave them a prize. They entered into the little game with great enthusiasm. It really takes so little to interest a child if one goes about it in the right way!" Easy. Teacher—Bobby, what do you understand by the term "circulation medium?" Bobby—It's one that goes from house to house doin' spirit rappin' stunts. ma'am.—Chicago Tribune.

SO far as speed is concerned, supremacy in aviation must be conceded to Jules Vedrine, known in France as "the greatest living air man," who recently won the James Gordon Bennett cup over a course near Chicago. He was an easy winner by reason of his consummate skill and the superiority of his monoplane, which was of 140 horsepower as against the 100 horsepower of the two competing machines, both driven by Frenchmen. The cup was won in a flight in which his best speed was 105 1/2 miles an hour. After the cup race Vedrine made an exhibition flight in better time, covering the same distance (12.4 miles) in 6 minutes 55.95 seconds. His rate per hour for this flight was nearly 107 1/2 miles. The photograph shows him rounding one of the pylons which marked the course.

Pillow Slips for the Baby. The desire of every mother's heart is to have pretty things for her own baby, no matter whether she has only one or the clothes are being prepared for the fourth arrival. In the matter of pillow slips the fancy runs to small ones, having a design embroidered in the corner. This may consist simply of the little one's initial with a wreath of small flowers about it, or a more ornamental spray of small buds, leaves and blossoms, but whatever the design the work is always done in white, and the material of which the pillow slip is made must be of softest cotton or linen. It is a grave mistake to embroider a pillowslip in the center, because the skin of a baby is naturally delicate and tender, and even a grown person would find it uncomfortable to lie with the face pressed against an embroidered design. Some years ago, before Queen Victoria's death and about the time that the queen's jubilee was to be celebrated, the following conversation between two old Scotchwomen was overheard one day on a street corner in London: "Can ye tell me, wumman, what is it they call a jubilee?" "Well, it's this," said her neighbor. "When folk has been married twenty-five years that's a silver waddin', and when they have been married fifty years that's a golden waddin', but if the mon's dead then it's a jubilee." Them That Have Not. Following over the trail of the charming young social worker whom the city missionary had turned loose on a helpless slum district, the missionary was grieved to hear most of her acts of helpfulness characterized as "blamed foolishness." "What do you call an act of foolishness in those who seek to uplift you, Mrs. Brown?" he said severely to one complainant. "Giving a $5 cookbook to a woman whose husband is out of work half the time and can't scratch up more than $8 a week the other half," was the succinct reply. And the missionary agreed with her. —New York Times.

Ironing Tablecloths.

The effect of a lovely linen tablecloth is often spoiled by the network of creases caused by folding it. In the future when ironing the cloth fold it once through the middle, roll and tie with a piece of tape. In this manner there will be but the one crease and the tablecloth will lie flat and smooth upon the table.—Indianapolis Star.

Summons

In the Circuit Court of the State of Oregon, for the county of Clackamas. Frank P. Gilmore, Plaintiff, vs. Barbara Gilmore, defendant. To Barbara Gilmore, defendant, above named: In the name of the State of Oregon, you are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint filed herein against you, in the above entitled court and cause, within six weeks from the 10th day of September, A. D., 1912, said date being the first day of publication of this summons. And if you fail so to appear or answer, for want thereof, the plaintiff will apply to the court for the relief demanded and prayed for in the complaint filed herein, to-wit: That the bonds of matrimony now existing between the plaintiff and defendant be dissolved, and for such further relief as may seem just and equitable to the court. This summons is served upon you by virtue of an order made by Honorable J. U. Campbell, Judge of the Circuit Court of the State of Oregon, for the county of Clackamas, dated on the 9th day of September, A. D., 1912, and which order prescribes that the summons in this suit should be served upon you by publication once a week for six successive and consecutive weeks in the Morning Enterprise, a newspaper of general circulation in the County of Clackamas, State of Oregon. H. R. SALT MARSH, Attorney for the Plaintiff.
