

AN INGENIOUS FOOTBALL TRICK FAILS.

The opening of the Rose Poly-Vanderbilt football game in Nashville, Tenn., recently, developed a brand new one. Following the kickoff, Rose lined up hurriedly, then shot a long pass toward the side line to a man in citizen's clothes. He ran forty yards and was downed by the Vanderbilt safety. To the astonishment of all, he then took off his hat, coat, trousers and shirt and was found wearing a regular football uniform underneath. Vanderbilt players had not noticed that only ten Rose men had lined up in regular positions.

"HURRY UP" YOST'S ENTHUSIASM FOR FOOTBALL KNOWS NO BOUNDS

Coach Yost of Michigan is pointing his strong eleven for the big games with Pennsylvania in Philadelphia on Nov. 9 and with Cornell in Ann Arbor on Nov. 16. "Hurry Up," as he is called, says the Wolverines are stronger this year than last and will pile up a big score on both Penn and Cornell. Yost is unquestionably one of the best football coaches in the country. His whole heart and soul are in the game, and his enthusiasm is unbounded.

An illustration of this is recalled which happened five or six years ago. It was before the annual game between Penn and Michigan, which that particular season was played at Franklin field.

The Ann Arbor squad landed in Philadelphia the night before the game, and after seeing his charges comfortably housed Yost took a stroll around the city, finally landing in one of the newspaper offices, where he had a friend in the sporting department. Every one was glad to see the Michigan coach. The usual questions were asked about his team, their weight, ability, and so forth, and in the course of the interview the changes in the rules were discussed.

Yost was warming up to his subject and getting more enthusiastic every minute.

To better illustrate his ideas, he got hold of two chairs to represent players on the field. These not being sufficient, he secured three more, which were lined up to represent a back field.

The "players" were then moved backward and forward as Yost explained several plays that were possible under the then new rules.

He soon pointed upon other chairs until he finally had eleven.

Then there was a circus, and the racket was deafening as the football coach moved his "men" from one position to another on the floor, talking all the time at a mile a minute.

Meanwhile the noise had attracted reporters and editors from other departments of the paper, and for awhile Yost had an audience of between twenty and thirty persons, to whom he was lecturing on the possibilities of the new rules. For ten minutes the whole machinery of a large daily paper was stopped while he, now fired with a prophetic fervor, was breaking up the furniture and imparting much of his enthusiasm to those around him. That is Yost.

MARSHALL SPEED BOY.

Mike Murphy, Penn's veteran trainer, says that Marshall, the Quakers' left halfback, is the speediest man in football today and should make a great name for himself on the gridiron this year.

Ventriloquism in the Bible. Ventriloquism has its first historic mention, as far as we are aware, in Isaiah xxix. 4. "And thou shalt be brought down and shall speak out of the ground, and thy speech shall be low out of the dust, and thy voice shall be as one that hath a familiar spirit, out of the ground, and thy speech shall whisper out of the dust."

Woman's World

Miss Pugh, First of Sex to Defend Murderer.

MISS LUCILLE PUGH.

Portia has been reincarnated! At least that is what all good theosophists would say. This time the fair Portia is not a tall, commanding dame, as pictured in combat with the grizzled old Shylock. Oh, no; she is quite the opposite—a petite and lovable little maid, five feet tall and tipping the scales at a trifle over 100 pounds. But she is all there, and, despite her diminutive stature, no other woman lawyer in the world, excepting the original Portia, of course, has ever been so much talked about as Miss Lucille Pugh, the first of her sex to defend a man accused of murder, and a negro at that.

"Did she win?" gasps some breathless feminine interrogator. To be sure she did, and, what is more, she made every one in the legal profession the world over sit up and take notice.

When Miss Pugh was assigned by Judge Swann of the New York general sessions court to the defense of Leroy Poindexter it will be recalled that she compelled a disagreement by the jury in the first trial and made so strong a presentation of her case in the second trial, after thirty-three hours of deliberation, a verdict of guilty of manslaughter in the second degree—a comparatively minor offense—was rendered.

But the indefatigable counsel for the defense, dissatisfied even with this flattering result of her efforts, is seeking now a third trial in the firm belief that Poindexter will be eventually acquitted.

As a matter of fact, few better examples for the equality of the sexes can be found than in Miss Pugh's achievements, a southern woman, whose birthplace is Hamilton, N. C. But what would a southern woman of the olden days think of one of her sex and race standing up in defense of a man accused of murder, and a negro at that?

With a modesty that is real Miss Pugh hides even from her friends her long struggle along the road to success. Opposed by her family and friends, discouraged by the failure of others of her sex in the difficult requirements of the law course in New York university, Miss Pugh was upon one occasion almost at the point of abandoning her efforts to secure admission to the bar and accepting an offered position as reporter for a cosmopolitan newspaper. But with unwavering fidelity to a plan of action, once carefully outlined, she persevered, though six members of her class left the ranks. During business hours Miss Pugh always wears a tailored skirt and a coat and waistcoat of mannish cut, with the conventional collar and tie. And there is excellent reason for this attire, as the convenient pockets are invariably filled with legal documents, notebooks and all the necessary legal paraphernalia. Nor does Miss Pugh appear at all masculine in her trig business suit; she is too essentially feminine for that. In fact, the mannish cut of the costume seems to suit her style exactly.

We're Going Some Nowadays.

In 1890 no woman could make a will, could enter college, any industry, trade or profession outside the home. Women were not the legal parents of children. In 1848, due to the agitation of women suffragists, married women were permitted to control their property. In 1867 New York state permitted women to make wills.

A Woman's Prayer.

God, thou Creator of my woman's soul, Grant me an answer to my heart's wrung plea. For ages men have taken ruthless toll From bonded womanhood, and we have clung in silence to a slavish past Nor dared refuse the toll lest love depart. God, give us courage to protest at last And trust to thee the treasure of the heart.

God, give us power to save the little child From grinding toll and politicians' greed; To clasp the hand of maids by justly denied. And be their refuge in the hour of need. Give us the right to take an active part In fellow service and to prove our worth. Enfold us, God, within thy mother's heart. That peace may reign upon a love-crowned earth. —Edith Medbery Fitch.

R. R. CO. PROTESTS AGAINST VALUATION

The county board of equalization, composed of County Judge Beattie, Assessor Jack and County Clerk Mulvey, has for several days been considering protests against assessments. The Portland Railway Light & Power Company has objected to a valuation of $200,000 of what was formerly the Moore Donation Land claim, part of which is leased by the Willamette Pulp & Paper Company and part by the Crown-Columbia Paper Company. It is requested that the assessment be reduced to $20,000. The company contends that the property is operating property, but Assessor Jack declares it is not inasmuch as part of it is leased. Thomas Boggles asks that the assessment on land owned by him in section 18, township 4, range 6 east, be reduced from $300 to $250. R. Tscharnar says the assessment of his realty and personality on North Washington Street is too high. A. C. A. Barclay asks a reduction of realty and personality assessment, the property being lot 4, block 4, range 6 east, Side. T. L. Charman asks that the assessment of the Charman block on Main Street be reduced from $18,000 to $15,000. R. C. Ganong and Elizabeth Fuchs also ask reductions.
