SHERIFF'S SURETY LOSES DAMAGE SUIT

A jury in Circuit Judge Campbell's court returned a verdict of $582.50 in favor of C. Shrucken against Sheriff E. T. Mass, $282.50 being for merchandise sold by the sheriff and $250 damages. Mr. Shrucken owned merchandise sold by the sheriff, which had changed hands several times before he bought it. The Merchant's Protective Association was in reality the defendant in the case as it had provided a bond of $3,000 for the protection of the sheriff. It sued out a writ of attachment against George Ketch, a former owner, under a law which provides when the owner of a store sells out he must give all creditors five days' notice and make an affidavit to that effect. The jury went out Tuesday evening and deliberated the entire night, returning a sealed verdict Wednesday morning. Shrucken was represented by Dimick & Dimick and the defendant by Angell & Fisher of Portland.

EFFECTIVE USE OF LACE

A gown which otherwise would be noticeably plain has been raised to distinction by the judicious use of bands of heavy cream lace. A band sufficiently broad to extend quite a ways upon the sleeve trime the right side of the surplice blouse and appearing again on the left side of the crossed tunic produces the effect of a blouse and tunic in one. The back of the bodice and the tunic are duplicates of the front. The sleeves reach slightly below the elbow where they are finished with a turn back cuff of the heavy lace. Plain white silk forms the novel shield.

GREEK WORSHIP OR LIGHTNING.

The Greeks were so much afraid of lightning that they worshiped it. They endeavored to avert its malignant influence by fessing and whistling at it. In places which had suffered by it altars were erected and oblations made to avert the anger of the gods, after which no one dared to touch or approach them.

Heart to Heart Talks.

By EDWIN A. NYE.

RICH AND UNHAPPY

To the woman of the house: Are you tired of your daily drudgery? Does the monotony of your work, which is never done, wear you to the edge of revolt?

Does the utter uselessness of doing things over and over again loom large? Are you wishing for riches and raiment and leisure and luxury and travel?

Then consider this woman. Sophie Irene Loch tells about her. She has abundant wealth and leisure, and yet she is discontented and dissatisfied.

This woman has everything life can give save one thing—happiness. She is never at peace. Her breakfast is brought to her bed. A maid dresses her. Servants cater to her slightest wish.

She travels much and has the most expensive staterooms in the steamers and on the train. She lives at the best hotels. But—

She has nothing to do.

In consequence she is always discontented and wishing for something, she knows not what. She gets lonesome and feverish and fretful and is constantly asking, "What's the use of it all?"

This woman says: "I envy the woman who works. Every hour of the day has a value, a reason. She fills a need. I wander about for a new interest, a new thrill."

Why doesn't she go to work?

"That's just it," she says. "Where would be the incentive, the need? Besides, I don't know how to begin. I would have to make myself need to work, and I can't make believe."

Do you see?

This woman has more wealth and more leisure than she knows what to do with. She does not know the joy of the worker, the compensation that comes with a task well done.

Which is the happier?

You with your commonplace task or she with her leisure?

Your answer, of course, there is such a thing as a happy medium between extreme wealth and poverty. And so there is. And you, probably, are neither poverty stricken nor rich.

Can you not subtract from the sting of your discontent—which, after all, is but occasional—by this glimpse into the life of one extreme?

The Rajah Diamond.

The largest known diamond before the discovery of the famous Cullinan diamond near Pretoria, afterward presented to King Edward VII. of England, was the Rajah, which once belonged to the Rajah of Mattan. It is an egg shaped stone, weighing 367 carats. At one time the governor of Borneo offered for it £100,000, two war vessels fully equipped, a number of canoes and a quantity of powder and shot, but this offer was refused, the rajah believing that the fortunes of his family were connected with this gem.

SHIPMENT OF HOGS ARRIVE IN PORTLAND

Country killed hogs are showing a weak tone in the Portland markets for the day and the prices are lower. As a rule the better class offerings are being quoted at 10c a pound, although an occasional transaction for something extra select may perhaps be a fraction better than this.

Receipts for dressed hogs in the Portland markets during the last 48 hours were very heavy. Wednesday's express brought a more liberal supply than has been received here for many a day.

Retailer's wants are now quite well taken care of and much difficulty is shown at the moment in unloading with promptness. The recent heavy runs of live hogs have added to the weakness in the dressed hog trade, the former having a direct effect on the latter.

While dressed hogs are weaker and lower a steady tone is ruling for country killed veals. Prices in this line are showing no change for the day, offerings moving off quite well at the previous range.

Prevailing Oregon City prices are as follows:

HIDES—(Buying), Green hides 6c to 7c; salters 7c; dry hides 12c to 14c; sheep pelts 30c to 85c each. EGGS—Oregon ranch eggs 35 and 38 cents case count. THE WIDOW'S GOAT

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary Press.

Deacon Carter of the village of Romeo was a good man and a good neighbor. He never refused to lend his hoe or his wheelbarrow, and his wife just doted on lending her flatirons or washboard. The deacon would have no more hurt a person's feelings than he would have jumped off the bridge into Thornapple creek, and that he was ever to be threatened with a lawsuit was the last thing to be thought of.

One day the deacon got a message to the effect that his widowed daughter over at Glen Dale was dying, and he borrowed a horse and buggy and drove over. The daughter had no children to mourn her. The father got there in time to receive her last instructions and to close her eyes.

The widow had neither dog nor cat, but in place of either or both had a goat. It had been sent to her when young from a distance, and they had learned to love each other. The goat had made no trouble at all, and the daughter charred her father to take Billy home with him and watch and guard him and treat him with loving kindness.

The goat was brought home and made to understand that it's future lines were to be cast in pleasant places. It was given the run of the yard, and for three days its attitude elicited sympathy and commendation. It really shed tears over the mistress and the home it had lost, and then it braced up and became playful.

The deacon had a tomato patch, and he went out one morning to pick two or three tomatoes to go with his breakfast. As he gathered them there was a concussion, and it was ten minutes later when his wife came out and found him just coming to himself again.

"W-what is it, Jephtha?" she gasped.

"The—the goat!"

"What about him?"

"Came out the run and struck me with his head!"

"But I don't see how he—"

But she did see. The goat came bounding on like a cyclone and bowled her over and over until she struck the row of sunflowers.

Two days passed quietly, but on the evening of the second the goat quietly slipped his collar and slipped out to see the sights of Romeo. While ranging around he encountered six different persons on their way to prayer meeting. He took them in as fast as he came to them. Some went rolling into the ditch and some against the fence, but all underwent the same sensation. They thought a tree had fallen on them.

Even a good man can't escape consequences if he is the owner of a butting goat. Next day six limping people wanted to know what Deacon Carter was going to do about it. Like the square man that he was, he offered them $3 apiece and made settlements.

"If it wasn't that I had promised Hanner on her dying bed," he said to his wife as the last victim limped away. "I know, I know, deacon," was the reply. "We'll have to keep him." "We will." "Durn his hide!" "S-s-s-h! There he stands in the door!"

That night the goat was shut up in the barn, but there was a window through which he jumped, taking the sash and glass with him. Mr. Griggs, the grocer, had locked up and was on his way home when some white object flashed before his eyes, and he knew no more for half an hour. The sexton of the Baptist church had spent two hours sweeping and dusting and had started for his broodie with his hands clasped under his coat tails. He went down like a ripe barley before the sickle. His last impression was that a meteorite had fallen from the night sky and plunked him between the shoulders.

There were half a dozen others that were treated to various surprises and sensations, and this time it cost Deacon Carter $50 to settle.

"We'll have to sell him," he said to his wife, with a sigh.

"And Hanner's ghost will haunt us!" The goat was chained up, and for two days he was a quiet, reflective animal. He stood most of the time with half closed eyes, as if seeing his past and hoping to see his future.

Then Sunday came, and the people gathered at the church. The goat worked some sort of hocus pocus on that chain and was once more at liberty. The front doors of the church stood wide open, as if inviting all the goats to enter with the sheep, and this goat entered. He entered on the run, and within three minutes he had driven out the congregation.

Could such a thing as that be over-looked and the offender forgiven? You know it could not. With pickets pulled from the fence, with clubs and rocks and umbrellas, they swarmed for the goat, and, though he fought back, they were too many for him. They finally hemmed him in on the bridge, closing in to take his life, when he went over the rail into the creek and was drowned.

"I s'pose Hanner is an angel," observed the deacon's wife as they sat together that evening.

"Yes, I s'pose so."

"And she saw it all?"

"Yes."

"What do you think she think?" "Probably that she had a fool for a father."

Truly Considerate.

A considerate patient had an artery opened by mistake for a vein by a French surgeon in the operation of bloodletting. The woman succumbed not long after to the effect of the blunder, but in her left left the surgeon a small yearly pension, "not only to comfort her, but so that she could live the rest of his life without doing vivisection any more." A similar historic occurrence is related in the Medical Times of a Polish princess who had had the same experience. She added a clause to her will expressing her forgiveness and leaving the surgeon a small pension to indemnify him for the "loss of reputation that may follow my sad catastrophe."

Cleopatra's Mummy.

Where does Cleopatra's body rest? Scarcely a layman who would not answer, "Why, in Egypt!" After her cajoleries, her wiles, her life of intense if not very exalted loves, Cleopatra was laid in one of the loveliest tombs that has ever been fashioned by the hand of man. But what a change 2,000 years has brought about! Today an ugly mummy, with an emblematic bunch of decayed wheat and a coarse comb tied to its head—a mere roll of tightly swathed dust—lies crumbled in a hideous glass case at the British museum. It is Cleopatra, the once great queen, a Venus in charm, beauty and love.—London Spectator.

MRS. LARAMORE TELLS TROUBLES

Lady in Goodwater Describes Her Distressing Experience and Tells How She Was Finally Relieved.

Goodwater, Mo.—"Ever since I was a little girl," says Mrs. Riley Laramore, "I was a great sufferer from dyspepsia. I suffered misery after eating, and had terrible heartburn."

I thought I had to suffer this way as long as I lived, but when I began to take Theford's Black-Draught, in small doses, every night, the heartburn was all gone in a few days, and I could eat without distress.

I took two small packages in all, and although that was some time ago, the dyspepsia has not returned.

I speak a good word for Theford's Black-Draught whenever I have the opportunity.

If eating causes distress, we urge you to try Theford's Black-Draught. It cleanses the system, helps the stomach to digest its food, regulates the bowels, and stimulates the liver.

It acts gently and is without bad after-effects. Try it. Price 25c.
