PRICE OF TURKEYS NEXT WEEK IN DOUBT

An easier feeling is shown all through the turkey trade. While a limited amount of stock is extra select dressed birds, the general market does not range above 23c for this class of stock, and that is all some of the leading buyers are offering. Everyone is guessing what the price of turkeys will be next week. General opinions seem to center around 23c a pound, although some figure that the market will be fractionally lower than this, while others are of the opinion that a slightly higher price will be forced. In any event, there is much speculation along the coast as to the probable price. Conditions here are similar to those shown in California and on Puget Sound. A mail advice from Chico, Cal., under date of November 16, says of the situation there: 'While the turkey crop in Butte County will be about an average this year, and the demand for the Thanksgiving bird will undoubtedly be about as strong as usual, there is an apparent slump in the market just now, and turkey buyers have not been as plentiful as they usually are at this time of the year. From present appearances dressed turkeys will sell in Chico this year at 30 cents a pound. The prevailing price for live weight will be between 18 and 23 cents. In San Francisco 23 cents is now being paid for live weight. Several of the turkey buyers were stung last year by San Francisco commission houses and it is possible that they will hesitate to do a very great business with those houses. One extensive buyer was out $458.48 last year because he followed the directions of a San Francisco commission house. The house told him to buy a certain lot of turkeys at so much a pound. He did so and then the bottom of the market fell out. The house refused to stand the loss and the buyer was out. Therefore, this year there is a scarcity of local buyers. So far as the Chico markets are concerned, however, there is going to be plenty of birds and the price will be comparatively low, so everybody can have a turkey to grace the Thanksgiving table. Over in the Corning section of Tehama County, where more turkeys are shipped than from any other California point, there is some activity in the market, but nothing like it was last season. In Glenn County there is a slump, and the turkey raisers will be compelled to find their own markets.
