Mayor Dimick has never been able to straighten out the tangle himself, so before quitting office he determined to have the courts do it for him, hence this true story.

C. D. Latourette opened up very piano, but as he went on to relate the perfections of his client as a police officer who was not a chief, didn't pretend to be chief, and never had act  ed as chief, he worked up a Bispham like cresendo which became fortissimo as he told how the mayor wanted to "stigmatize" his client, and stamp the mayoral heel on the neck of a perfectly good police officer. Spent with emotion Mr. Latourette took his. seat, and Attorney B. N. Hicks rose men for their All Americans. Accord- to his feet and promptly moved the court that Shaw be ousted from his job, forthwith, rightaway, and that he further be told just where he belongs. Mr. Hicks alleged that Shaw was sporting a star marked "Chief of Police", and that he acted as chief at council meetings: that he appointed deputies, by his assumed virtue as chief of police, that his disclaimer as not being chief of police was not consistent with his acts as an officer, in which he acted as though he were very much chief of police, and taken altogether Shaw was far from being the injured patriot that his learned friend had pictured.

The mayor then put in a word or two for himself. He told how Shaw had solicited the backing of merchants, church organizations and wom ens clubs, to the end that he (the mayor) might be compelled to appoint him. How the council had bucked him from the start, simply because he was not the mayor they wanted. How they had turned down Burns, one of the best citizens in the town, who had proved his value as a public officer by twenty years of faithful service, and how they had in every way handicapped him in the police ques-However, he redeemed them tion. somewhat by saying that on other questions he and the council had worked together in harmony to the great gain of the town,
