New Probationary Baseball Contract Will Not Last.

MAY CAUSE LOTS OF TROUBLE

Rule Was Passed For Protection of Minor Leagues, but Was Unnecessary-Evers Talks of Modern Baseball-Hoodoo May Follow Merkle.

By TOMMY CLARK. new probationary contract which the major baseball leagues are chased and drafted is going to be short S. P. Young has returned to his lived. The new order of things is going to make trouble sooner or later, and its fallacy will then be realized.

This contract gives the player only

25 per cent increase in salary over what he received in the minors, and the contract is but of forty-five days' duration. This means that in the event of a player making good during that period the club for which he is Oregon, is in Oregon City visiting playing must enter into a new contract with him, and the argument of salary, which is usually always straightened out before the season opens, may come at a time when barmony is most desired and bring about a condition which is detrimental to the

> Incidentally, the young player who is drafted or purchased and has been playing in a small league at a low salary will not feel much encouraged when he receives his first major league contract and finds that he is raised but few dollars.

This rule was passed for the protection of the minor leagues, who claim to have trouble satisfying the players who go up to the majors at an increased salary and are returned because they fail to make good. But no rule or change of system was necessary to combat this annoyance, for it stands to reason that if a player expects an increase when he comes to the majors he should expect a cut when by reason of his incompetency he is returned to

If baseball history repeats itself, Fred Merkle, the Giants' first baseman, will be out of major league company shortly, while Jake Stahl, the Boston Red Sox manager, will be found doing bench duty next season.

It is strange, but true, that world's series first sackers seldom last long. Engle, north half northeast quarter in fact, there seems to be some sort of a hoodoo which follows the men who play the initial sack on the teams which win pennants.

Go back a few years and this will be proved. There never was a more sensational player in a world's series than Jiggs Donohue in the series in 1906 between the Sox and Cubs, and yet Jiggs could not find a big league job two years later. Big Dan McGann of the Giants did not last long after the 1905 series with Philadelphia of the 19 tween the Tigers and Cubs was undoubtedly Claude Rossman, and yet the following year Jennings got rid of him and he drifted into the minors. In 1909 Bill Abstein looked to be a most valuable man in the position until after the world's series, and then Pittsburgh let him out and he drifted into St. Louis, but failed to make good, and he has had a hard time ever since holding his own in the minors,

Just two years ago saw Harry Davis and Frank Chance battling at first base in the world's series. Now both are virtually out of baseball as far as the playing end is concerned. The former is not connected with any club, while the latter will manage the New York Americans next year.

The question of whether baseball has improved in recent years is one which is often disputed by some of the veteran ball players.

Johnny Evers, manager of the Chicago Cubs, related an incident the other day in answer to the question whether or not the game had made any forward strides, which is well worth telling.

"I don't know of any better illustration of whether or not the game has advanced than the case of John M. Ward, who was one of the greatest players of the old days and who was president of the Boston Nationals for a few monhs in 1912. If the game Company, was accidently killed with hadn't advanced Mr. Ward should have

> "One day, when 'Hub' Purdue was pitching for Boston against the Cubs. 'Hub' had two strikes and no balls on Sheckard. 'Hub' put the next one over the plate, and Sheckard landed on it for a hit and drove in the runs which won the game. After the game Mr. Ward went to the dressing room and gave Purdue a tearing out. He then notified the Boston pitchers that the next time a pitcher bad two strikes and no balls on the batsman and then would be fined $25.

"The players told us about the new rule. We had three more games in that series with the Boston team. Every time one of us got two strikes and no balls we knew that the pitcher didn't dare get the next ball near the plate. So we let that one go past and took a lusty swing at the pitched ball that followed. Say, we had a regular picnic. I guess that's a little of what might be called 'inside' baseball."

Mme. de Stael's Reply.

Mme. de Stael is responsible for a contribution to the woman suffrage question which may interest those who have done and suffered for the cause. "I have no taste," said Napoleon in talking to her, "for women who meddle with politics. "You may perhaps be right," replied Mme. de Stael, "but since people have taken the freedom to cut off their heads on account of polities they ought at least to be allowed to understand why."-Westminster Ga
