the rescue of a fire insurance company which the New York city conflagration of 1835 had brought to the verge of bankruptey. In his childhood his father, Junius Spencer Morgan, made his mark as a banker and was a partner in the then noted Anglo-American financial house in which George Peabody had established in London, When John Pierpont Morgan came to do things on a great scale for himself he had left behind him the prestige of George Peabody & Co., Drexel, Morgan & Co., and their allied interests in national and international finance. A big man, in body and in mind; a tireless worker and most tenacious of his purposes; a man whose word was his bond and who never broke a promise no matter what the cost of keeping it; a man with plenty of human sympathies in him despite the gruff manner and outward appearance which spoke of nothing but force; a genuinely patriotic citizen, as his conduct in the financial crises of 1893 and 1907 amply proved; an extraordinary and lavish collector of pictures, statues and all sorts of objects of art and a liberal benefactor of artistic education and of many charities; a strong American who did his work with power but not with brutality, who called for the highest efficiency an drewarded it amplythat was John Pierpont Morgan.

Heart to Meart NEW POTATOES ARE

By JAMES A. EDGERTON

Each day is a 18 w day, but it needs poet to appreciate the fact.

To most of us each morning means Quetland but the repedition of the same old grind, public is beginning to take the highdo we miss its finer, subtier meaning. That is where we need the poet vision. In truth, each day is a fresh creation, as marvelous and enchanting as though there had never been a day be-

It is an invitation to feast our eyes, to try our powers, to create for ourselves.

It is an opportunity to make of ourselves all we had hoped and longed It is an open door to romance, a road leading to new countries. Our mistakes are behind us. need not repeat them unless we will. The old life is gone. We need take from it nothing but its lessons. Each day is a little different from all that have ever been before. We ourselves are a little different. Thus there is infinite variety, also infinite progress if we will. The novelty of-and discovery. The new day should bring the joy of a welcome surprise, as though it were a precious gift bestowed upon us. When we look on imminent death we realize how glad a thing a new day would be. We do not appreciate what treasure the days are until they are about to be taken from us.

Were the scales removed from our eyes we would be aware of the charm and value of the new day and extract from it all its possibilities, all its experience, work, knowledge and beauty.

If we will, the new days are a golden stairway by which we climb If we will not, they are a stairway of clay leading down to deeper gloom. We are the arbiters and architects. We are the choosers. We are the magicians who transform by the wands of mind and will and work. The new days offer us all we would have or be. We but need the vision to see the will to resolve and the en-What will we do with the next

"We learn many useful things at our school," remarked Genevieve, "Yesterday we learned how mortar is made very interesting."

"And how do you make mortar?" inquired her father. "Well, let me see if I remember. I believe you take a cupful of lime, a cupful of water and a cupful of sand." -Kansas City Journal.

New potatoes are now arriving freely from the son product. While there is a vast difference between the price of old growth and the newwer offerings, still the er quoted stuff. Shipments of new potatoes from California have shown a very material increase during the last few days and sales are now being made down to 7c a pound in sack lots. At this time of the season, when prices are so high for new stock, the purchases are mostly in small lots, which are generally quoted around 7 1-2 cents.

The new potatoes now coming forward from California are not nearly of such good size as former shipments. This is probably due to the fact that the demand is far better than the larger sizes are able to take care, therefore the marble stock is substituted by the Californians, The latter are very greedy in this respect and invariably take every advantage of the situation which an Oregon grower would consided unfair.
