

PAVING QUESTION INTERESTS MANY

Vitrified brick for this street seems to be favored by most of those who believe that the thoroughfare should be hardsurfaced, owing to its general cleanliness, and to the fact that paving bricks for use on heavy grades are now made with a bevel surface on one side that will furnish a foothold for horses. In spite of this, however, many of the property owners believe that the best foothold can be provided by a macadam paving. The use of stone blocks is not favored by many people, owing to the experience in other cities, notably Seattle and Tacoma, where it has been found that under heavy traffic conditions the Belgian block pavement wears almost as smooth as asphalt.

GOOD DOG AWAITS HOME AND MASTER

There is a perfectly good collie in the city pound that Chief of Police Shaw says some farmer ought to have. It will cost a farmer a dollar to get the dog out of the city's clutches, but this dog will prove worth such an investment. His father was a pedigreed dog valued in New York at $1,000 and the dog's mother was almost of equal worth. This dog, when a pup, was owned by Dr. N. C. Strickland, who later sold him to N. R. Lang, former mill manager for the Willamette Pulp & Paper Company. When Mr. Lang moved away the dog returned to his former home and became a canine derelict, and was recently picked up by the dog-catcher for running at large without a license. Chief Shaw says the dog would make a perfect ranch dog, and deserves a better fate than that which is awaiting him at the pound.

Too Early Perfection

By F. A. MITCHEL

Howard Chidester was an artist in love with his art. He began to make pictures when he was a child and before he was a man had become famous. He painted all day and sometimes would have painted at night had it been practicable. At first it was love for his work alone that gave him an interest in it, but in time he grew accustomed to the praises it brought him. Between the ages of twenty-five and thirty-five he would go into a gallery where one of his masterpieces hung on purpose to hear the encomiums heaped upon it. Persons might compliment him upon other gifts—and he possessed several in no small degree—without exciting in him the slightest pleasure. It was to hear his praises as a painter of nature that he found a place in his heart.

PRACTICAL ONE PIECE GOWN.

Chidester was thirty-five years old when he painted the great picture of his life. A young lady one day drove up to his studio in her carriage, which bore her family crest, and alighting, sent up her card. The artist's eye lighted with pleasure. Miss Eleanor Gray, whose name was on the card, was the most beautiful woman of her day. When she appeared at functions, at the opera, driving out, as she passed every head was turned to look at her. At the time she made this visit to Chidester her beauty was simply perfect. Not a line appeared anywhere on her face, her complexion was a most exquisite pink and white, and her figure was a combination of ravishing curves.

"I have called," she said, "to ask if you could be induced to paint my portrait. I know it is a great deal to ask of the most famous living artist, but you will, won't you?"
Chidester stood gazing at her, wrapped in admiration of her beauty, for some time before he replied.
"I can do greater justice to your beauty," he said, "by using you as a model in a picture I am painting representing springtime."

"Paint me to show me at my best," she replied. "I have nothing but my beauty to interest me—to be proud of."
"And I," he replied, "could not live without my art."

The most artistic dressmakers were applied to for designs for a costume which would give the best effect, and one was selected ravishing in its simplicity. The head, neck, bust, the feet and lower limbs below the knee were bare; the hair was partly concealed. Chidester saw before him a perfection of beauty, and he idealized it. The result was his chef d'oeuvre, the marvelous painting which was to him what the Sistine Madonna was to Raphael. The world saw and wondered.

What Chidester and all others deemed a crowning glory was in fact the misfortune of his life. He had been climbing, had reached the crest and must begin his descent. For a time he did not realize this, then feared it, and at last it fell upon him like a death stroke. He hunted everywhere for another model that would inspire him like the last one. He found one equally attractive of its kind, but a different type, a child. He read stories of children by Hans Christian Andersen to fill himself with their innocence, then began his work. It was successful, but it was not his masterpiece. Then the consciousness that he had begun his descent came to him, and he fell into melancholy.

Before a final giving up of all hope he determined to paint his former model, Miss Eleanor Gray. In a new conception, he hurried to her house and sent up his card. When the lady came down to receive him he noticed a tinge of melancholy on her face.
"Why do you look sad?" he asked.
She placed a finger beside one of her eyes and said: "I have discovered a line there. Do you not see it?"
Chidester declared that he did not. But this did not reassure her. She declared that she had bloomed and must now pass into decay. In vain he told her that she had not reached the richest beauty to which she was destined, that he would paint one more picture of her representing her as "Summer." He could not excite a hope. That little line would multiply till it covered her whole person. Where there was one today there would be several tomorrow, and in time she would be covered with wrinkles.

"No," she said, not knowing that he was pleading for himself as well as for her. "I have passed the summit. What you painted was the perfection of my beauty. What you would paint now would be a shade lower in the scale."

A look of distress crossed his face, and she asked what it meant.
"You have been describing me as well as yourself," he said. "I, too, have climbed the hill and stand looking into the valley. I can never make another picture like the one I made of you. From this time forward my powers will wane."

"I cannot understand that," she said. "You are in your prime. There are years of work before you. You will climb higher."

"No, I will not climb higher, but had I not met you I might have been longer in climbing. Your perfection of beauty, coming to you before you were even in mid-age, brought my perfection in my art long before it should have come to me. Your realization, as mine, will carry us down the quicker. Our descent will be slow, but it will be sure."

TWILIGHT SELECTS SCHOOL DIRECTORS

At a special meeting of the citizens of Twilight Thursday evening, in the school house, two directors were elected to fill vacancies that have been caused by moving of two of the former directors from the school district. L. E. Bentley was elected to fill a one-year term, and Spencer Nash was elected for a two-year term. Miss Alta Nash was elected for the remainder of the year. Her work has been very satisfactory, and the desire to keep her was expressed by the meeting. It was also decided to STAGNATION IS DEATH. The sun would be consumed by its own ardor if it did not shine. Nature knows nothing of hoarding. The sun gives away its gold without ostentation. The ocean gives its vapors to the clouds, the clouds return them to the earth, the rivers to the sea. There is a constant exchange between lungs and leaves. Stagnation is death. Give to get; get to give.

Policemen in Silk Hats. Savona, Italy, is probably the only town in the world where policemen wear top hats. One cannot help wondering what the policemen's "toppers" look like after the officers have had a rough and tumble with bootleggers. Perhaps, however, Savona lives up to the level of respectability indicated by the silk hats and does not possess bootleggers.—Wide World Magazine.

Heart to Heart Talks

By JAMES A. EDGERTON

THE POETRY OF THE FUTURE. Poetry is going to dominate the next age just as a great historic religion dominated an age that passed some time ago and a spirit of scientific research after facts dominates the age that is passing. Now, in a certain pessimistic philosophy which poets will always resent there is a disposition to see in the creation of our earth a mere accident in which the power behind its harmonies is an eyesless blunderer, hideous grinning novelty, a blood stained jester. The poetry that is to command the spirit of the next age is to have nothing to do with this spirit. There are a central philosophy and harmony to life. The future of poetry is immense, because in poetry, which is worthy of its high destinies, our race as time goes on will come to feel an ever deeper and surer stay.—Alfred Noyes, Famous English Poet Now in America.

Amid all the walls that no more poetry will be written it is comforting to find one voice from a man of common sense and vision. Poetry will never die till love dies, till religion dies, till music, art and beauty die. Mr. Noyes recognizes the relation between poetry and religion and predicts that the two will become more and more closely identified as the years living in the nobler race. Real poetry and real religion have always been identified. The old Hebrew prophets were the loftiest poets. Dante's "Divine Comedy," Milton's "Paradise Lost" and Goethe's "Faust" are among the loftiest poems of any age, and their themes are religious. Wordsworth, Coleridge and Tennyson sing ever of faith and immortality. Burns was an apostle of the religion of humanity. Even Shelley, with all his professed atheism, is intensely religious in substance if not in form.

Of the great school of American poets Longfellow, Lowell, Bryant and Whittier breathe religion in almost every line. Walt Whitman preached the religion of democracy. Emerson, whom Mr. Noyes pronounces the greatest American poet, was a modern religious prophet. Indeed, the poet and prophet have ever been one. They will continue to be one as long as men long for immortality, as long as men love harmony.

The golden age of poetry is not past. It is yet to come. May its greatest voices be heard in our own land!

See. I am familiar with your music, remarked the amateur at the musicale the other evening. "It seems so," replied the popular composer. "You are taking liberties with it."—Magazine of Fun.

DODGE THE RUT. Don't grow stale. Many a man bewails his lack of success in life after he has permitted himself to get into a rut. While dreaming of success he has been as blind as a bat and slower than two snails. He blocked his own way.

WINNING SUCCESS. From today you must bring to bear an ever increasing wisdom—the application of lessons learned. Every incident of your daily toil should be made an educational incident. The average young man does not learn until perhaps too late that it does not pay to fritter or idle away his time. Make a study of those who have gone to the head. Ascertain what they did in an emergency.—Henry M. Byllesby.

Big Cyanide Plant Is To Be Installed Soon Work To Commence Immediately

Construction work is to begin on the 100-ton cyanide plant on the property of the Ogle Mountain Mining Company early in April. Mr. Charles F. Spaulding, Engineer and expert, will be here by April 1 to take charge of the construction work and the orders for machinery will be placed immediately. Stop and think what the above statement means to Clackamas County and the state at large. Have you helped finance the proposition? Are you going to let the chance go by? Or are you going to get in and help us along? Now is the time a little help will be appreciated, for when the plant is completed it will do the rest. If you don't want to help, just keep your eye on Ogle Mountain and watch the gold bricks come out, and console yourself by the old saying, "The chance has gone by."

Where can you place a few dollars with the chance of winning larger profits? There is no easier money made than there is in mining. Why do we say we have a mine? Because we have our property developed, the veins are of true fissure origin, there are many in number and range in width from four to seventeen feet; are located from surface to thirteen hundred feet in depth and all carry values in payable quantities. What more can you ask, as these are facts and the property is located right here at home and owned by home people. Gentlemen, what more can we do to prove to you that we have one of the best investments for big returns on the Pacific Coast? Our display of ore is credited among mining men as being the best on the coast. Call at our office, Tenth and Main Streets, and learn all particulars or fill out the following contract:

Under the management of Mr. Spaulding we feel sure we are going to get all there is coming to us, and the best of treatment for he has the name of doing things right.
