An Incident of the French Revolution

By MARTHA V. MONROE

Antoine le Beouf was a leader of one of the arrondissements into which Paris is divided, and when the great revolution came on so far as his way extended it was absolute. Jean Millet was a leader, too, but a Conservative. The revolution was like a roaring stream, that gathered power as it sped on. Time came when those who had been instrumental in starting it lost their heads by trying to control it. Millet went into it hoping to reorganize the existing government. Before it finished its mad course its object was to get rid of the existing government and the class that supported it by means of the guillotine.

When order was restored under the directory, Le Beouf, who had made bitter enemies during the period of blood running from having sent so many persons to the guillotine, found himself exposed to plots hatched against him for purposes of revenge. One who had lost a near and dear relative spent a long time in manufacturing a case of murder against him, had him arrested and tried. Millet presided as judge, and it was in his power so to instruct the jury that they must bring in a verdict of guilty or not guilty, as he chose. When it became his duty to do this, instead of at once addressing the jury he addressed the prisoner.

"Citizen Antoine le Beouf, stand up!" Le Beouf, who was much broken by his troubles, could only stand by leaning on his daughter, a young woman perhaps twenty-three or twenty-four years old.

"Citizen le Beouf, do you remember during the reign of terror one who at the time the Girondists were executed protested against their execution?"

There was no reply. "Do you remember that you sent out an order for the arrest of that person, that he was brought before you and adjudged an enemy of the revolution? He was confined in a room in your house—the prisons were too full to admit him—till he could be sent to the guillotine. He escaped and strove as before to keep the French people from committing political suicide by their murderous course. Tell me, Le Beouf, do you remember that man?"

"Yes," moaned the prisoner. "I remember him." All who heard the judge speak believed his words to be preliminary to a vengeance upon the accused. They supposed that he would in the end ask Le Beouf if he thought that one who had sent so many to the guillotine should be spared from the guillotine. Then instruct the jury that it was their duty under the law to bring in a verdict of guilty. The girl who sustained her father kept her eyes on the judge in a frightened, reproachful look, like the rest dreading his final words.

"This man Millet, who was trying to stem the butchery of yourself and others, kept himself out of your way. You tried to get your hands on him by open means, but, failing, tried treachery. You sent for him on the ground that you wished to form a union between the Conservatives and the Radicals and desired him as a representative man of the Conservatives to join with you to make the revolution less bloody. Suspecting your design, he sent a man to meet you in a dark court, where you would not recognize him. He was seized and hurried away. But when the light shone on him you saw that it was you instead of I who had been tricked."

The prisoner trembled, but said nothing. "And now, Antoine le Beouf, you who on the bench—not the judicial bench, the bench of the revolution—sent so many innocent persons to the guillotine, what do you think that I, a judge regularly appointed by the state, should do in your case?"

The prisoner bowed his head without reply, but his daughter in a trembling voice said, "You should be merciful, M. le Judge." "No, mademoiselle, not merciful. Your father does not deserve mercy. But first I should be just. It has not been proved that the prisoner committed this murder with which he has been charged. But this is not my ruling motive. Gratitude is today stronger than justice—gratitude to you, who, when I was confined in the rear of your father's house while he was in the front sending men and women to the guillotine, came and at the risk of yourself dying to save me opened my door and conducted me to the street. It is my duty to instruct the jury in this case to bring in a verdict of not guilty, and it is my pleasure to give you your father's life."

When the judge was speaking the last words an impressive silence reigned in the courtroom. Millet le Beouf rose to the judge and, kneeling before him, seized his hand and kissed it. Raising her, he turned to the jury and gave them his formal instructions that freed the prisoner. Then Le Beouf tried to thank the judge; but, being unable to speak, he waved his hand to him and was led away by his daughter.

A part of the throng followed the released prisoner, and a part remained with the judge to express their interest in his conduct and their admiration for him. He became one of the prominent men under the directory. Such was a trial during a period of law and order. How different from those trials which were mere prefaces to murder!

Making Farm Life Attractive

"A widespread movement of the day has for its object the popularizing of the idea that the drift of population should be to the soil and not to the cities. To this end the work of demonstration has greatly broadened, and numerous states have seconded the National Agricultural Department in helpfulness of those who want to become producers on the farms, but do not know how to go about it. A little capital soon vanishes when an av-

Oregon City - Oregon

Every city man undertakes to make a living in general agriculture or any of its branches unless he has exceptional knowledge and staying qualities. He needs to be prepared by a study of conditions in their true light. It is quite possible, if he is that sort of person, to accomplish more than he expects, but there is no need of any failure or disappointments when ordinary prudence is included and reasonable energy shown.

Farmers already established and classed as successful can see from experiments going on around them, even in the boys' corn clubs, that general labors on the soil are less productive than they might be. In no nation in the world is it as easy as in the United States to become the owner of available farming land. But it takes definite knowledge to improve the opportunity. Farm demonstrators who are multiplying, and agricultural courses that are widening out, are a practical recognition of the need of instruction to those who can see that farming is the best vocation if rightly comprehended and followed up. Crops in this country per acre might be doubled or trebled. Workers on the soil could be similarly increased if they are wisely guided and master the fundamental principles of how to make farming pay, and insure at the same time an enjoyable life. The farm demonstrators are on the right road to modify an excessive movement of population."

The foregoing editorial in the Morning Enterprise on April 6th is full of meat, but might have gone a little farther to keep pace with the times, and with general progress as we find

The state of Oregon provides for a fund for the agricultural extension work, but the County must put up a like sum for this work. No expenditures could be so helpful as money spent in the fostering of agricultural development. There are many people going back to the soil, some with but meagre knowledge of farming, and there are farmers who because of lack of scientific knowledge are barely making their farms yield a living. Through the agricultural extension work they would receive instructions in dairying, horticulture, poultry, etc., and in bookkeeping.

This expenditure by the County in co-operation with the state in spreading the gospel of better farming, will be returned many fold through taxation, for many places where only the most needed improvements are now seen and where poor farming is practiced, would become places of beauty, and of profit to the owners. Let us have this extension work in this county.

MASONIC GRAND MASTER ENTERTAINED BY LODGE

Masons of Clackamas county gathered in the lodge rooms of Oregon City lodge Saturday evening to greet George H. Burnett, grand master of the jurisdiction of Oregon. Ritual work of an impressive order was put on, and Mr. Burnett was given an enthusiastic welcome. Following the formal program some enjoyable entertainment was offered, and light refreshments closed the evening. Mr. Burnett is making a grand lodge tour, and expressed himself as much pleased at the condition of the Oregon City lodge.

You Cannot Be Lost on a Straight Road

You do not always stick to the straight road when buying. You wander off into the pleasant paths of buying on impulse, at strange stores, at odd times, and sometimes even needlessly.

Your pocketbook suffers when you leave the straight road. You are compelled to buy often by having unknowingly bought poor quality. You lose time in searching for the articles you need, and you receive too frequently poor service as a consequence of not sticking to the straight road.

Advertising is the straight road to satisfaction, quality, and price in buying. By it you gain known value of merchandise, good service, and the best quality for least cost. Advertisers in THE ENTERPRISE are making it easy for you to profit by following the straight road to successful buying. Read their advertisements closely and constantly.

Squibs.

"The West is a country of meagre past, solid present, illimitable future." There is not a crop known to a temperate climate that is not found growing in Clackamas County. Diversified cropping has figured largely in the development of the County, and a beginning has only been made.

OREGON.

In the March number of the Chamber of Commerce Bulletin appears the poem written by Mrs. M. M. Clarke, whose word picture shows that she loves and lives in Oregon.

My Country is Oregon.
By Mrs. M. M. Clarke.
My Country is Oregon, the best under the sun,
Of thee I'll sing,
Land of the apple and prune, from thy vast orchards rise,
Sweet scent to thee.

My country does contain vast forests, fisheries, game, And rivers great. Opportunities abound above and under ground. Even the ocean clings to her with pride.

My country has best of climes, good crops and prosperous times All through each year; The scenery can't be beat, air, waters, pure and sweet.

O'er valley, hill, and plain, contentment reigns.

My country has vast space, a home for every race, To thee she calls; Come! Let her prove her worth, no place like her on earth, Come on the first train West To Oregon.

NO PLACE LIKE OREGON; SAYS MELDRUM RESIDENT

Porter Davidson, long a resident of this county, has returned to his home at Meldrum, after a four weeks' trip to Clinton, Almont and other towns in Iowa, his native state.

He says that it was necessary for him to wear an overcoat practically all the time he was in the East. He returns to this state more imbued with the notion that Oregon is the best place on the face of the earth. He says that he would not trade his place at Meldrum for the biggest ranch in Iowa.

COMMITTEE TO MEET

The entertainment committee of the State Sunday School convention will meet in the M. E. church at 8 p. m., Monday evening to perfect arrangements for the housing of delegates. Those members unable to be present are requested to send in their reports to the chairman, Rev. E. A. Smith, so that a complete list of available hosts can be made out.

BEAVERS UNABLE TO STOP ANGELS

HOW THEY STAND

With a run in the first inning, easily made by Page, the first man up in three tries, Los Angeles took the game away from Portland Saturday afternoon by a 3 to 1 score. There was lots of snappy playing, and on the whole the contest was the best one staged so far this season at the Vaughn street grounds. Ryan twirled for the visitors, and James officiated for the Beavers.

In the opening canto Page went to bat and rapped out a two-bagger to right field. Kreuger made a good throw into third base, but Lindsey fumbled, and Page went right on to the next to the last sack. Moore, the next man up, flew out, and Page romped home after the ball had been caught. Magart put a safe one between first and second, and Howard got to first when Derrick dropped a return ball from the field. Gill fanned, and Magart got caught at second when off base. After such a start the game went along with numerous close shaves, but the Angels always managed to get just a shade the better of it.
