BOOSTER DAY With the weather is with US forecaster declaring that all the Northwest is to enjoy summer weather for at least twenty-four hours, Oregon City's annual festival occasion would seem to be opening under auspicious circumstances. The first straw hat has appeared, and the girls have already decked themselves in their prettiest and coolest of dresses. Summer herself seems to be at hand, so the chances are that Nature will do her part to make Booster Days successful. This being Oregon, however, it may rain. Aside from that the outlook could not be better.

All roads lead to Oregon City, and all roads are being steadily traveled.

PRODUCE MARKET SUFFERING SLUMP

Efforts made recently to better the potato market do not seem to be over successful. The tubers are so plentiful that it is impossible to get a high market, and the glut of offerings is keeping prices well down. As a result the acreage planted to spuds this year will probably be materially lessened, and next year will find a better demand. Local potatoes are also falling to bring money because of the big supply shipped in from the south. New spuds are quoted at from 5 to 7 cents.

California and Louisiana berries are arriving in greater quantities, and are of much better grade. The southeastern berries are quoted at $3.75 a crate, while the California fruit is selling at $3 flat.

Scarcity of cabbage is reported locally, which will probably better prices for supplies. The opposite is reported in pens, and the market is falling. Asparagus is quoted at $1.25 a crate, and is of indifferent grade. There is no movement worth mentioning in local onions, carrots or turnips, all of which are low.
