AN EXCELLENT The plan to take BOOSTING IDEA cinematographic pictures of salmon fishing at the falls, noticed elsewhere in these columns, is one that is most commendable in all respects but one. Why stop with moving pictures of the falls? It is true that it has also been proposed to have the work of Oregon City's big mills reproduced on the films, but the field should not be narrowed to activities along the river. There is plenty of material for good pictures hereabouts, pictures that will be instructive and interesting for the general public, and pictures that will accomplish a great deal to advertise Oregon City. Films such as will be taken here will find ready sale to the various "weekly" companies, who are ever seeking new material for their "picture newspapers." With these views there is opened up a new and world-wide field of publicity that so far has been taken advantage of by but few cities, and still fewer lines of business.

The criticism of the "movies" so generally expressed is aimed largely at the paucity of the material they offer for public entertainment. There is no excuse for this. People are already tired of the films that show the honest-hearted bandit giving himself up to justice at the end of 2,000 feet of gelatine so that the tenderfoot can marry the lass of the ranch, just as they used to do in the old-style melodrama. The cry on all sides is for pictures of life and action, of development and growth, so that those whose travels never extend beyond the door of the "nickelodeons" may have the benefit of animated sights and peeps at world centers and places of news interest. Producing moving picture companies pay well for such films, in fact they pay well enough to make it worthwhile for any up-to-date and boosting community to purchase a moving picture camera for its own use.

Los Angeles is now the best advertised city in the world because one of the large film companies stages most of its dramas in that community and its environs. There is no reason why Oregon City should not enter the field. There is opportunity enough here, not only for the novel pictures of salmon fishing, and of the work of the mills; but the surrounding country furnishes scenic attractions that outrank those offered by Los Angeles and many other places. Views showing the adoption of heavily timbered land to agricultural area, in all its successive changes, would not only be entertaining and instructive, but would serve to bring to the attention of millions the advantages of Clackamas county. Views of railroad development in these parts could be taken, and be even better advertising than those of the development of farming acreage. All people like railroad pictures, and they like particularly the community where the romance of the men who cut the trail for the iron horse centers. There are a hundred ways that moving pictures could be utilized as an asset to Oregon City and Clackamas county, and it is a good sign that the start is to be made with the falls and the salmon. The good work should be kept up.

A TERRIBLE SUSPENSE

By EDWARD L. BISSELL

How persons whose daily work carries with it the safety of the lives of other persons ever become accustomed to it I don't know. I have been one of them, and I couldn't do it, though I confess I had an experience that took away all my confidence. Those I refer to are engineers' pilots and the like. I was a druggist. I was obliged to put up prescriptions all day and often at night. Most of them were harmless, but in some were ingredients calculated if given in large enough doses to kill. We had a system about the poisons, but I defy any system ever invented to work every time. Sooner or later something will go wrong with it.

I was putting up a poison one day for vermin killing purposes. I had an engagement to meet my wife at a railway station at a certain hour to go to the country with our little boy, who was ill and who we feared was slowly dying. It is such situations as this that will break through systems and cause accidents. I had just a few minutes to reach my train and put up two prescriptions, the one a poison, the other harmless. My mind was preoccupied. If I should not reach the station in time my wife with our sick child would be in great distress. I was thinking of her while I was doing my work and delivering the packages to the two different persons, who were waiting for them. This done, I set myself bare and ran for the station.

I barely reached it in time, and, having put my family aboard the train, sat down beside them, mopped my brow and my mind settled back to what I had been doing before I left the store. A horrible suspicion came

Did you know President Wilson is something of a baseball fan? Well, he is. This picture preserves his baseball smile. It was taken at the opening game of the season in Washington between the Senators and the Yankees of the American league. The president threw the new ball on to the diamond from his box and sat through the whole game. He enjoyed it too. He was accompanied by Joseph P. Tumulty, his private secretary, and his daughter, Eleanor. The president expects to attend a game whenever he can get the chance to drive away the cares of his new job.

to me. I doubted if I had not given the poison to the wrong person. Another suspicion followed on the heels of the first. Had I not neglected to paste the label marked "Poison" on the bottle? My first impulse was to jump off the train, though it was moving at a rate of fifty miles an hour. This, of course, I controlled. I must remain for no one knew how long in suspense. I had intended to stay a week with my wife in the country before leaving her there, but I now resolved to return the next day. If the blow was to fall upon me I preferred that it should fall while I was at my post than when away. Besides, I hoped that work would help to relieve me of the burden on my mind. Not being willing to give my wife an additional trouble, I refrained from confiding to her my horrible suspicion, but I told her that we were so busy at the store that I would be obliged to go back the next day. This in itself was a bitter disappointment to her, and when the time came for my departure my boy was so ill that I lost much of my worry on account of my suspected blunder in my worry about him. Several days passed, and I heard nothing indicating that any one had taken poison, though I studied the newspapers regularly, seeking for what I feared to find. Then it occurred to me that the poison might have been taken, but the one who had swallowed it saved. The blunder might have been reported at the store; but, owing to my distressing situation, they might for a time withhold the facts. A week passed. My boy was much better, and I returned to the city. On the way while scouring a newspaper as usual my eye fell on a heading, "Fatal Mistake of a Druggist." I could read no more. I covered my eyes with my hands and groaned. Thrice I tried to muster up courage to read my fate, but was unable to do so and at the end of my journey left the newspaper in the train. Time enough to know all that had happened when I go to the store. When I went to the store there was no evidence of anything having happened. I didn't dare ask about the case of poisoning I had seen in the newspaper, for the druggist might not have been located, and there was no use in giving myself away. But I worried all the same. The two customers to whom I had given the medicine were an old man and a young woman. The poison was intended for the man, the ordinary dose for the young woman. I believed I had given her the poison. Her features were firmly fixed on my mind, though I had never seen her before, she being not a regular but a casual customer. I did not suppose that she was getting the medicine for herself!

Mr. Martin has a startling message concerning one of the most serious conditions that has ever confronted Christian work in America. Probably no one has a better grasp of this subject than Mr. Martin, who is an interesting speaker. The First Baptist church, which supports several mission stations, should be especially interested in this address. At the evening service, Dr. Milliken will speak upon the theme, "Has Mind Power Over Matter." There will be a rousing song service and an after meeting. The pastor will also speak on Monday evening. Inquisitorial Methods of Citizens' Committees Questionable

Contrary to Legal Procedure of America

By Justice WARREN W. FOSTER of New York

THE authorized committees of investigation, such as have been in office in Washington recently, are ENTIRELY PROPER, in my mind, and highly enlightening. Whatever objections may be raised against the political affiliations of these authorized committees in Washington I regard the political character of the men who conduct them as greatly in favor of PUBLIC WELFARE.

A Democratic investigating committee may be suspected of seeking to uncover the rascality of the Republican party, just as a Republican investigating committee will obviously seek to discover the rascalities of the Democratic party. No doubt there are rascals on both sides of the political conflict, so that politically investigating committees under political authority are perhaps the SAFEST FORM OF SECURING EVIDENCE FOR THE PEOPLE.

A PRIVATE CITIZENS' COMMITTEE ACTING MORE OR LESS SECRETLY IN ITS SYSTEM OF SECURING INFORMATION IS SOMEWHAT CONTRARY TO THE LEGAL PROCEDURE OF AMERICA.

The position of the law as it is interpreted in the American courts is very different from that of the European. In Europe the methods of securing the truth are INQUISITORIAL; in America they are DISPUTATIONAL. I am not assuming to criticize the value of one system over the other, but over here we have found that the inquisitorial method of court procedure is NOT SO EFFECTIVE AS OUR OWN.
