A NEW ROAD PLAN Outlining a THAT HAS MERIT system for federal aid in good roads work, yet not in any way encroaching upon state sovereignty, Sen. Jonathan Bourne, Jr., has suggested a bill to congress which will provide for a national highway fund and a board to control its expenditure among the 48 states in proportional amounts. The measure takes into consideration the various plans that the several states may have, and is in no way mandatory upon any of them as far as participation goes. In short, it leaves the states free to make use of a share of the fund if they so desire; and if they do not, leaves them equally free to pass the matter by.

Proportionate distribution of the fund is based upon land area, population, assessed valuation of property and the present mileage of roads in any given year. Under these factors a percentage is determined for each state, and this percentage of the national fund may be drawn annually for use within the borders of any state. Under an outline of the plan as drawn up by the statistician of the special joint committee on federal aid in construction of post roads, of which Mr. Bourne is chairman, Oregon would receive—were the law in effect now—$16,500,000 out of a national fund of one billion dollars. Were the national fund less, Oregon's share would be proportionately less.

The Bourne plan provides for much co-operation between the state and the federal government, not only in the original construction of roads, but in their maintenance; and it also offers a strong bar to "pork bar-

TINKER FAVORS THE FRESH KIDS He Says Nerry Players Succeed Better Than Modest Ones.

LIKES THE TY COBB TYPE. Cincinnati Reds' Manager Declares More of Detroit's Star Class Would Be Welcomed by Him—"Better Be Too Fresh Than Too Modest," Tinker. "Pepper is the main ingredient in successful baseball, and the boys now breaking in haven't got any." Thus mourns Joe Tinker, manager of the Cincinnati Nationals, and there is reason for his wail. The rising generation has as much pepper in it as a carefully fluted sugar bowl. "When I cut into this game," continued J. T., "I thought it was up to me to be full of life and ginger, to keep things cheered up, to make a noise and keep right on making one. I did so, and a large part of what success I have achieved is due to this part of my character. In my opinion baseball is a vent for life and spirits, an escape valve for healthy, noise and harmless vigor. It is also a field where spirit and pepper bring the best results, and the most successful ball teams of my experience have always made good on this idea. "You'd think that a young player newly come from the brush with all the advantages of life, of strong, fresh physique, of jolts and sniffs free from the stiffened pulps of age, would yelp and squawk from the very joy of his existence. You'd think that he'd butt into this game that he has made his profession, this game wherein he makes his living and where he hopes to rise to superiority, with a whoop and a rush, a yell and a disturbance. You might expect an old, tired ball player to be stern and silent, but would you expect clamlike stillness from a kid? "And yet these kids are as quiet around the whole circuit as so many potatoes. Like potatoes, they have eyes, and most of them show the same quantity of brilliant spirit and brilliant intellect. They come and go like mopping mutts. They walk around like frightened shadows. They go into their work as if they owed an apology for being permitted to cumber the earth. All day long you never hear a squeak out of them—no life, no pepper, no ambition. "Of course some of them are afraid they will be called down for being too fresh. They think they will be sat upon and classed as nerry jokers. Not with me they won't. I don't care if they call me a fried monkey or a fussy jackass on there on the field so long as they do it through excitement and sheer interest in the pro- ceedings. If they are afraid of being considered too bumptious let 'em get it right away. Was Ty Cobb a meek, retiring mope, or was he so fresh that all the other Tingers wanted to bet him for his impudence? "Better be too fresh than too modest. Better be as impudent as a bison than be as reticent as an oyster. Noise, noise, squawking all the time—that's what I want and what wins in baseball!"

Heart to Heart Talks By JAMES A. EDGERTON

READING HISTORY Did you ever hear the complaint that history is dry? I have. But I never heard it that I did not wonder at the sort of dry mind that could transfer its aridity to the most delightful and human study in the world. To him who sees the golden thread of the divine running through it history is a sort of holy writ. The annals of the last nineteen hundred years are in a way a continuation of our Christian Bible, the unfoldment of the plans there formulated. All drama, fiction and poetry are but history revealed through seeing eyes. Not infrequently it is revealed in distorted form. If read understandingly the real record is more beautiful than these fancies drawn from it. For it is nearer the truth and therefore has deeper depths than even the novelist or poet has seen. History is romance, religion, politics, poetry, heroism, tragedy and drama all rolled into one. Did you never read it and identify yourself with its characters, thus living over the old scenes? If not you have failed to find the soul. History is the gigantic drama of the ages, with some unseen hand shifting the scenes. Did you never imagine the delightful pastoral scenes and the simple folk that lived when the world was young—the folk that talked of fairies and of wonders, who saw God in the clouds and the rising and setting suns, who heard his voice in the thunder, who believed the old tales, with their miracles and divinities? Did you never picture yourself as a knight or a lady fair of yore? Did you never gain a thrill and a higher idea from the battles for liberty and the martyrdoms of the far days when the world was young? History reveals to us ourselves because it reveals man. It enlarges us because it gives us a glimpse into the lives of large soulful men and women. As we read it we are the kings, the heroes, the deliverers, the liberators. We live over the great deeds of the past. History reveals to us our own age, shows us the meaning of the struggles through which we are passing, warns us of the pitfalls, holds out to us a hope of better things. Study of the progress of the past gives us faith in the future. Read history, but read it between the lines. Read it with understanding, insight and quick sympathy, and read it to discern the divine hand behind it that shapes it ever to better ways and nobler ends.

Officeholding For Motives of Distinction Serves Country Best By MARTIN H. GLYNN, Lieutenant Governor of New York

It would be an excellent thing if it were possible in this country to draw a SHARPER LINE BETWEEN POLITICS AND ADMINISTRATION, between party and officeholding, but I doubt if the divorce can ever be completely effected. It seems to be one of those cases in which, under the conditions of our government, a compromise will have to be arranged between two extremes.

Our old system of regarding office purely and simply as the REWARD OF POLITICAL SERVICES has been greatly modified in recent years by the introduction of civil service laws, but this wholesome check cannot be carried to the point where the country WOULD BE RULED BY AN OFFICEHOLDING ARISTOCRACY OF MERIT. The people would not tolerate it, and their feeling in the matter is based upon a very sound understanding of the fact that what the country might gain in some directions by having a highly trained bureaucracy it would more than lose in other directions by withdrawing the bulk of the people from any interest in administration and more gradually from any interest in politics. OFFICEHOLDING IS PRETTY TIGHTLY BOUND UP WITH OUR POLITICAL IDEAS, AND IT IS NOT WITHOUT ITS GOOD SIDE. OFFICEHOLDING FOR MOTIVES OF DISTINCTION IS A GOOD THING FOR THIS COUNTRY, FOR IT PLACES BRAINS, AMBITION AND HONOR AT THE COUNTRY'S DISPOSAL. OFFICEHOLDING MERELY FOR PROFIT WOULD MEAN THE EXTINCTION OF OUR GOVERNMENTAL IDEALS.
