By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1918, by Associated Lit-erary Press. Nobody could ever exactly fix the date when the dispute between Joab Warner and Moses Stansell originated, but it was generally concluded that it lasted twenty-nine years before Providence put an end to it. One fall evening, when Dethi consisted of only seven houses and a huckleberry patch, Joab

"Yes, tolerable," admitted Moses. "You allus lay in a bar'l for winter?" "I surely do."

"And what do you put into it to keep it from gettin' hard and twangy?" "I allus use a little peppermint."

"I've heard you did, and I'm goin' to tell you of a better thing. Put in sassafras instead of peppermint, and you'll have a bar'l of cider equal to champagne You know how folks erv for my cider along in the winter, and it's the sassafras what does it." "Sassafras couldn't beat peppermint," says Moses as he shakes his head.

"But it does beat it all holler," says Joah. "You use it once and you'll be grateful to me all the rest of your

"Waal, I wouldn't give peppermint to a grubby calf!"

'And I wouldn't give sassafras to an allin' hog!"

That was the beginning of the dis pute. They didn't lay hands on each mouthpiece of the device. People other, but they felt edgeways, and they who have observed them say that this never met without bringing up the question. They had it all to themselves at first, but after a bit other folks were dragged into it, and a good share of the county was divided into "peppermints" and "sassafrasers."

Both disputants were church members and belonged to the same church, and the pastor finally called them before him and said: "See here, brethren, why this dispute?" "'Cause Mose is a mule," replied

"'Cause Joab is an idiot," replied Moses

"That is not Christian talk." "Let him give up, then, and say he's wrong.

"He's the one that's got to give up." "But you will divide the church if you keep this up," warned the pastor. "I'd bate to see it," replied Moses, but peppermint's the thing to preserve

"But they hain't!"

"Why, hello, Moses, is that you? 1 thought I smelt peppermint around "And I smelt sassafras as soon as any one else but a born fool!" There would be more to it, and a dozen men would go over the question and call each other foots and liars, and the trouble kept spreading. It beat Joab when he ran for supervisor, and it downed Moses when he wanted to be a deacon of his church. If a lightning rod man or a tin peddler showed up within ten miles of Jericho be was asked for his opinion on the cider question, and the man who favored peppermint couldn't do business with the sassafrasers. Many people tried to smooth over the quarrel, but when they went to Joab he said:

"I'm willin' enough to be friends with Moses, but, durn his hide, he's got to drop that peppermint business

Then they would go to Moses and talk and argue and point out his duty, but he would shake his head and reply: "It's no use talkin' tili Joab lets go of sassafras. He's stickin' to it jest because he's pigheaded and wants to come out on top."

The thing had been going on for nearly forty years, and Joab and Moses had got to be grandfathers and old men, when they met at the postoffice for the last time. Both were tottering and feeble, and as they caught sight of each other Joab called out: "It's that blamed peppermint workin' in your system, and I don't care how soon it takes you off!"

"It's that sassafras in your blood." replied Moses, "and your folks needn't expect me to come to your funeral?" The next day both of them were in bed, and after looking them over the doctor said their time had come to go. They lasted two weeks and died on the same day, but before dying Joab sent word to Moses:

"I sin't got no pity for such a critter. If you'd used sassafras you might have lived to be 100 years old."

When Moses received the message he braced up and sent back word: "Nobody wants any pity from you. If thar's cider in heaven they'll use peppermint to keep it from growin'
