IMMIGRANTS Interesting comment-AND OTHERS ary upon the consistency of the American people, and of Oregon people in particular, is to be found in the news dispatches these days. In Portland there are to be held a series of meetings to devise and means of attracting to the state settlers from the north of Europe, whom it is believed will make excellent citizens and who will develop the vast agricultural possibilities of the vacant stretches within Oregon's borders. The first meeting is to concern itself principally with the extension of German immigration. One hundred and twentyfour miles south of Portland, in Eugene, at a meeting of ministers of one of the influential churches of the state, there arose Wednesday a discussion as to the advisability of permitting the further immigration to Oregon of Japanese, and particularly such Japanese as would till the soil and develop farmland not desired by people of other racial characteristics. The general opinion of those present seemed to be that the Japanese were not wanted. One minister had the bravery to say that "it is un-Christian of us, but we do not want the Japanese." Thus it would appear that improvement of the state's agricultural potentialities is not the only thing to be desired-it makes a difference whether the improvement is to be brought about by Japanese or by some other nationality.

Without prejudice, it is a safe bet that the Japanese will accomplish more intensive agricultural improvement than will the Germans-to take them as an example, because the first immigration conference is to concern Germans. In the matter of scientific agricultural work, trained Germans will probably accomplish more than the Japanese; but it is dollars to doughnuts our friends from northern Europe would turn up their Teutonic noses at much of the land that is utilized by the immigrants from the Mikado's realm, and which they make pay big dividends. Experience of other states has shown that the northern European nations prefer first-class land, while natives of southern Europe will not be so particular, and will gladly take what they can get, as do the Japanese.

Oregon has plenty of land of all varieties. She has some land that nothing short of a miracle will ever make fertile or productive, and some land that just naturally grows crops, whether it is tended or not. With this condition of affairs, and with the nations of the earth differing in their tastes and inclinations, it would seem the part of wisdom for this state not to tag along at the lead of California and draw the dead-line at any particular kind of immigration, as long as the new arrivals had a certain degree of intellectual standard. California, which just now is so distraught over the Japanese question, is more generally developed than Oregon, and can afford to pick and choose and be as finicky as an old maid. Also she has less land to spare; and also, it is reported, she has had some unpleasant experiences with Japanese settlers in the past. Oregon's principal need is development. She should welcome any and all races that will come in and help her with the work of attaining her destiny, and who will at the same time behave themselves. She has room for Germans, Scandinavians, Poles and Japanese, as well as all the others. She has land to suit the requirements and pocket-books of all, and she is in no condition to pick and choose. It is most and fitting that she should try to encourage immigration from northern Europe; but as long as the industrious "Yankees of the Orient" are willing to come in and lease bottom land, and make two stalks of celery grow where before was but one stunk cabbage, Oregon has no license to imitate California and mouth about the yellow peril. Oregon needs to have her land developed, and the more varied and diversified are those who do the work, the better will Oregon's growth be, and the sooner will she be in a position worthy of her size and resources.

PAULINE CUSHMAN IN FILM

When it came to the selection of a heroine to impersonate the title role in "Pauline Cushman, the Federal Spy," Selig's Civil War feature, which will be shown at the Grand in two reels on Friday, May 16, Winnifred Greenwood, one of the leading women of the Selig Chicago Stock company, was assigned the part. Mr. Nixon, the author of the story, called for "make-ups" to be identical with the historical originals, and so when a question arose regarding the make-up of Miss Cushman, the war collection of C. F. Gunther and the books in the Newberry Library were carefully studied. Portraits of all other principals concerned in the picture were found and revived, but as the secret service archives are closed books, the portrait of Pauline Cushman was not to be found. Finally an old photograph of this daring girl was discovered in the Army Museum in Chicago, but the officials of the building would not allow it to be taken from the case. Therefore, the fair star was escorted to the War Museum and the officials were asked to allow the actress to see the picture of Miss Cushman. The attendant, a sheep-eyed grizzled veteran, looked quizzically at Miss Greenwood, who was an utter stranger to him, and then he said quickly: "What's the use of looking at the photograph? That girl looks just like Pauline Cushman!" Strangely enough, the veteran was absolutely right, for the features of Miss Greenwood so well mated the photographic likeness of the famous actress and Union spy that there was little need of "make-up" to transform the living woman into "Major" Pauline Cushman. Another detail that was carefully worked out during the production of the production of this elaborate film was the markings in the Southern uniforms. It is a well-known fact that the military tailors to the Southern army, after the first two years, were unable to supply correct uniforms because of the impoverished condition of the Confederate exchequer. Wives, daughters and sweethearts of the officers often embroidered the stars and bars which designated the rank of their loved ones. These details were reproduced in the Selig production with as much fidelity to historical fact as the pictorial records allow.

Heart to Heart Talks By JAMES A. EDGERTON

OLIVER CROMWELL. It has been more than 250 years since Cromwell played his stormy part in English history, yet his example and influence are still potent in all English speaking lands and to some degree in all other lands that feel the impulse toward democracy. For Cromwell was the father of modern democracy, the forerunner of the age of republics. We think of him as the iron man, but see only one side of his complex character. Lord Morley is the only biographer, outside of Carlyle, who really understood the great Puritan leader. Morley revealed this insight in a single phrase when he called Cromwell a "practical mystic." For this iron man had the soul of a prophet and poet. He saw coming ages. Some one has called him a "dumb prophet." Dumb he was not, yet his speech was ever inadequate to voice his mighty vision of the movements toward political and religious freedom beyond his own times. Cromwell was one of those rare characters who combined the spiritual and political vision. He was an evangelist carrying a sword. He was a preacher clad in armor. Mistakes he made, of course-mistakes in Ireland, mistakes with his parliament-yet his mistakes came more from the age in which he lived than from the man himself. He had to create a republic out of raw material more than a century before the age of republics. He had to hew his way with the sword in a time when reason would not avail. He had to kill the serpent of kingscraft in an era when mankind knew no rule but that of kings. He had to practice religious toleration in a time when the world knew not the meaning of the term. Cromwell literally fought the devil with fire, met force by force and duplicity by duplicity. Yet through it all he kept his soul white. What he was a man. He was true to the heavenly vision. He fought a good fight. He kept the faith. He was loyal to God and to humanity. It was his faith as well as his ironies that made him invincible.

Cromwell had the saving grace or common sense. He was practical in all things. One well known sentence of his reveals something of his two sided character: "Trust God, but keep your powder dry." It took the world two centuries to understand him, to remove the cloud of clumsy and lying calumnies heaped upon his great name. Yet the ages do justice, and Oliver Cromwell, tall and white of soul, the great hearted soldier of God, is coming into his own.

Farmers Will Soon Fall In With Co-operative Spirit By President CHARLES R. VAN HISE of the University of Wisconsin

THE rising flood of the co-operative spirit which is characteristic of this twentieth century WILL SWEEP THE COUNTRY and eliminate the frightful wastes of the existing competitive systems, but it will do this WITHOUT DESTROYING COMPETITION, at the same time keeping free and open full opportunity for all. With the privilege of co-operation will of necessity go public regulation wherever the market is controlled in consequence of the permitted co-operation. There can be no question that the waste in distribution for agricultural products is far greater than for manufactured products, and in the country as a whole this waste is to be reckoned each year in hundreds of millions of dollars. We shall all doubtless agree that the solution of the problem of EFFICIENT DISTRIBUTION rests upon the word CO-OPERATION-co-operation of the producer, co-operation of the consumer, co-operation of the distributing agency with the producer and the consumer.
