PITCHER WILLETT HAS AD-VANCED IDEA ON SHORT-ENING GAMES.

Edgar Willett, the Detroit pitcher, has advanced an idea as to a method of shortening baseball games, though it is not original with him.

Edgar caught the idea while watching Sam Crawford amble around the bases after smashing the ball into the bleachers for a home run

"Why not permit Crawford to run to first and then return to the bench instead of consuming a minute or so walking about the sacks?" says Edgar.

"There are, we'll say, fifty home runs hit in the American league each season. That means an hour wasted. Every one knows the hit is a home run when it drops into the bleachers or goes over the fence, so what's the use of wasting time and effort?"

Theory

By GRACE OGLESBY

This is an we of reform or at least new formations, and such an age is always attended by a certain amount of hysteria. When people leave a beaten track to strike out into new paths they are liable to bewilderment. and so when they find or believe they have found that they have been influenced by false ideas in seizing new ones they are prone to jump from the frying pan into the fire. More than this, they are liable to jump from terra firma into water altogether too deep for them.

One of the new departures of the present day is a dissatisfaction with marriage as we in America have known it. Kent Blakeman's father and mother had lived together comfortably, bringing up half a dozen Kent at twenty-five discovered that they had taken a great risk in binding themselves so closely together that there was no easy way for case fortunately they had not wished to break it. But, as for him, he did not intend thus to tie himself up. He believed in experimental marriage. If he married he would reserve the right to leave his wife as soon as he ceased to love her, and she should have the same privilege with regard to him.

Miss Estelle Woodruff, being about the same age as Blakeman, also grew up in the same atmosphere of hysterical reform. She heard persons talking about the frequency of divorce, marriage being a failure and kindred subjects, and her mind was very susceptible to absorb new theories. Blakeman found few women to sympathize with him in his notions about marriage-most reforms begin with a paucity of numbers-and when he met Miss Woodruff and made an easy convert of her he was much pleased with ber-that is, he was much pleased with himself for having struck into a new path-and considered the girl above the ordinary in that she had appreciated his ideas.

There is an infinite variety of mental structure among human beings. Blakeman, who married Miss Woodruff, was of a different brain. He kept on dewhile she, with the coming of children. ceased to take an interest in them and at last turned against them.

Perhaps it was the discovery that mental caliber that started him in his when it had completely waned it was each find a new mate.

she recognized the outcome as a great chicken. misfortune. But she was a plucky as well as a proud woman and gave no sign of what a blow she suffered. The prenuptial agreement gave the children -if any came-to the mother, and this was, of course, a godsend to her. She wondered as she looked back when the provision was made that she had very nearly assented to a conditional proposition to divide the children between husband and wife.

When all preliminary arrangements had been made Mrs. Blakeman and her children-the little ones being ignorant of the separation of their parents -took a train for the mother's birthplace, where they expected to live. Blakeman saw them off and as the train was starting kissed them all and left the car He stood on the platform, looking after them as they rolled out of the station, and all of a sudden a great light broke in upon his brain, and he said to himself:

"What an addle pated ninny I have made of myself!" Going to the ticket office, he bought ticket for the next train to follow them, and the same night, when the mother was ruefully hearing the children say their prayers, the father swooped down on them like a cyclone

A Transmigration Story

By F. A. MITCHEL

In the city of Bungalore, in India. one Kadur, an old man, lay dying. His wife knelt by his bedside-there were no children-waiting for the end and praying to Vishnu in his behalf. In India they believe in the transmigration of souls, and the woman prayed that in order that she might have her husband near her his spirit might pass into the body of one of her pets, of which she had a great many. When she was satisfied that he was dead she left the body where it lay and, weeping, went out to another room. As she opened the door she saw in the middle of the floor a tiny monkey that had just been born looking up at her with a peart face and a pair of bright eyes Whether or not it was her imagination that made this human-like countenance appear in her eyes to resemble her late husband it is impossible to say. Certain it is that she took the little creathem to break the chain. In their ture up in her arms and hugged it to her bosom, at the same time thanking her god that he had answered her prayer, for she did not doubt that the soul of him she loved had passed into the body of the monkey just born. Now, the woman was rich, and this is what she did. She made a will, leav ing all her property to the monkey so long as it lived, and at its death it was to go to her nephew. Rustom, a boy of whom she was very fond. She also bequeathed the monkey to a woman in whom she had great confidence, who was to have a large sum for its care as long as it lived. It was thus made the interest of its keeper to preserve its life as long as possible.

The widow lived three years after her husband's death. When she died her nephew, Rustom, was about eight een years old and bad a sweetheart Naturally he wished to marry and needed the money.

But the woman, Dulmara, who was getting large pay for taking care of her ward, realizing that Rustom was interested in its death, redoubled her efforts to keep the monkey alive. She put it in a wing of the house, had fron bars put on all the windows, and no one was permitted to go in to it veloping in his anti-marriage theories, without passing through apartments occupied by herself.

But these precautions were not nec essary, for Rustom had been brought up to believe that his uncle's soul was he had been mistaken in his wife's in the monkey and if he killed it be would be guilty of a crime. There is no end to the superstition in the people of India, and Dulmara believed the story. While the two were talking a wee chick picked through the shell of an egg, and this settled the matter. Dulmara did not dare to turn Agya away for fear of the wrath of the tiny bird which might contain the soul of her from whom she drew her stipend. The girl was at once taken into the household and given the care of the chicken. She took it in to see the monkey, but the little brute evidently did not recognize it as its wife, for if permitted to get at it would have eaten it.

Agya, having effected an entrance to the household as well as access to the monkey, lost no time in carrying out the rest of her plan. Soon after her arrival the monkey sickened and died the next day. Though Agya did not admit that she had poisoned the monkey, she threw off the sham she had put on and, leaving her little ward to take care of itself. went to Rustom and told him that he had succeeded to his fortune. She being a witness to the death of the monkey, he had no trouble in securing his property. The two were married, but Agya did not then dare to tell her husband that she had killed the monkey

He was scarcely prepared for such a sin. and in order to make him feel more comfortable she told him that his uncle had appeared to her in the form of a bird of paradise and thanked her for poisoning it.

Rocks That Float In Water.

A geologist who is well up in his business can name a dozen or twenty different specimens of rocks and minerals that have less specific gravity than water and which will, if tossed into that element, float on the surface. Hubelite is one of the best known representatives of that class. The common pumice stone is another example. The rock with the very least specific gravity known is damari, a substance found in an extinct volcano in Damara land Its atomic weight is .5, or exactly one-half that of hydrogen.
