When Is a Lobby an "Insidious" Lobby? Up to Senator Overman.

United States Senator Lee S. Overman of North Carolina was chairman of the subcommittee of the senate committee on judiciary which started the hunt after the alleged "insidious" lobby brought to public attention by President Wilson. When the investigation began June 2 it was planned to continue it within ten days, but the names of so many witnesses were handed to Senator Overman that he thought it was better to extend the inquiry. The investigation, in view of the importance of the new tariff problems, aroused much interest all over the country.

been grouped in with the others.

For instance, Illinois women may now vote for presidential electors, but may not vote for United States senators or congressmen. They may express their preference for members of the board of assessors, but they may not vote for mayors. They may vote for sheriffs or coroners. On the whole the new law gives them the right to vote for more important officers of the executive branch of government than otherwise; but doubtless the women would also like to be able to select their state legislators—a duty which is denied them.

It would be interesting to know what influences framed the measure that gives the women of Illinois this weird assortment of powers, and that so limits them in other ways. It is hardly to be believed that it was an accidental choice of offices that was turned over to their gender and uplifting tendencies. More likely it is that there was a desire to keep safe from their power certain positions which have long been a part of that peculiar spoils system that has made Illinois famous. Yet the women are reported to be satisfied with what they have received; and if such is the case, possibly it is because they prefer half a loaf to none at all.

Oregon women will watch with interest the progress of events henceforth in the big state that lies between the great rivers and the great lakes. It will watch the efforts of the women of Illinois to obtain a complete right of suffrage, and the efforts of those opposed to this. Perhaps in the continuation of the fight for the vote the "cat in the bag" will appear; and then the rest of the world will know why such an odd law was passed as that which has just received the approval of a majority of the state solons.

A LOCAL

Attention is once again BENEFIT called to Oregon City's good fortune in being located on a site that is not yearly inundated with backwater from the Columbia. This time it is a group of men and women from the Middle West who note the superiority of this city's location. Bankers and capitalists from the two Dakotas, touring the Northwest to see what they could see, tore themselves away from Portland's delights and semi-flood for half a day and journeyed by boat to Oregon City. All the way up the river they looked upon flooded fields, flooded industries, flooded gardens and homes, and wondered why it was that the Oregon country would permit such things.

And then they came in sight of a ledge of high land, dry and yielding an abundance of good crops, and just beyond the start of this they saw spread out in safety the business and manufacturing districts of this city. Naturally when they went ashore upon docks that were not knee-deep in water, and rode in automobiles along streets that were not being washed with waves from passing vessels, they commented upon the fact. Their first impression of Oregon City was favorable, and as they went back into the agricultural country lying behind and above the city, their enthusiasm increased. They had already seen the "sunken gardens" around Portland, and had come to believe as half true

the jest about Oregonians and web feet.

These men will go back to their homes in the east and will tell what they saw out here. Because they are citizens of high standing in their own communities, their word will be believed above the information contained in various "booster booklets" sent out by the cities which they have visited. In none of these booklets will they find mention of annual floods—unpleasanties like that are never mentioned by Commercial clubs. And people in the Dakotas, looking for locations out here, will put two and two together, and will make four. They will find that the things said about Clackamas county have all borne verification by the men and women who made this trip; and they will find that some of the things that they will read about other counties have not borne verification in the matter of the annual inundation. Ob-serving this, these people will think of Clackamas county with favor.

This city and its surrounding territory have been fortunately provided for by nature—not only in the way of resource, but also in the line of protection from floods. This fact is a subject that might be made much of by local boosters, particularly as but few other communities in this corner of Oregon can point to the same advantage. Oregon City is located above the flood line, above the danger zone. The country tributary to Oregon City is even at a greater elevation. Hence it is still further protected. These are things that prospective colonists ought to be told about; they are things that home-seekers consider before moving to the West; and they are more things that it pays to talk about.

NEW LAW IN Illinois

has granted ILLINOIS its women the right to vote for many offices, but in so doing has explicitly barred them from casting a ballot for others. The new legislative enactment, in fact, is one of those weird and wonderful things that often come to pass in American government. It accomplishes in the main the thing that was desired, but out of a peculiar inconsistency it spoils the joy of victory by naggingly taking away from the victorious a few unimportant things that should have

Cultivate In Children Their Instinct to "Make Believe"

By CONSTANCE D'ARCY, Originator of Plays and Pageants For Children

IF we educate the children of today to CARE FOR THE BEST DRAMA we shall be educating the audience of tomorrow, and then there will not be the hue and cry about the nonappreciation of good plays as there is today.

CHILDREN ARE TAUGHT THE POETRY OF STEVENSON AND LONGFELLOW WHEN THEY ARE LITTLE IN THE HOPE THAT WHEN THEY ARE OLDER THEY WILL LOVE SHAKESPEARE AND SHELLEY, SO WHY SHOULDN'T THEIR DRAMATIC TASTE BE EDUCATED AS WELL? I BELIEVE THAT THAT IS QUITE AS IMPORTANT.

As I have studied youngsters and tried to find out what most appealed to them, I have discovered that with the INSTINCT OF "MAKING BELIEVE," the natural dramatic feeling striving for expression, they have certain definite likes and dislikes. For one thing, although they are not always enthusiastic about stories with a moral, they do like plays with a moral—in fact, they seem to prefer them, in which they are quite unlike grownups. And it seems to me that ACTING PLAYS IN SCHOOL OR CLUB is a pastime which has much to recommend it.

It is the girl instinct always to want to "DRESS UP" IN GROWNUPS' CLOTHES, but did you ever see a small boy parading up and down the street in his father's swallowtail coat? He would be ashamed to be seen in it. But give him an INDIAN COSTUME OR A POLICEMAN'S SUIT and he is gloriously happy.
