NOTHING EVER ESCAPED THE EYES OF JOHN M'GRAW.

According to James R. Mc-Alger president of the Red Sox, the Cleveland club, of which he was a member some years ago, was sitting out in front of a notoriously poor hotel in a western town one evening when a bus containing the Baltimore Orioles, deadly rivals of the Cleveland gang, whirled by. A spidery youth, whom McAleer has since identified as John J. McGraw, peered from the cavernous depths of the conveyance. "Ha!" he bawled. "A second class club at a second class hotel!"

JENNINGS HAD DESIGNS ON UMPIRE'S WHITE SUIT

Hughle Jennings certainly had lots of sport with Umpire Connolly in a recent Chicago game. The umpires were adorned in their "glad rags," the white ones, and Connolly and Hildebrand went the limit by getting a shine as well.

"Pretty nifty," said Jennings as he met Connolly at the plate and tried to pat him on the back.

"No, you don't!" howled Connolly "I'm on to you. Your hands are dirty, and you want to leave the imprint of your hand on my white uniform. You don't make me look like a buckwheat advertisement!"

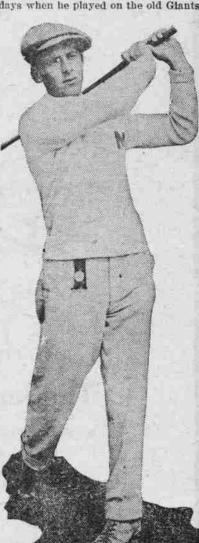

Jennings assured him that he was mistaken and tried to step on his shoes. "No, you don't!" howled Tommy. "You want to spoil my shine."
