EGG QUOTATIONS GOING UP AGAIN

Eggs, after going through a series of gymnastics upon the market for the past several weeks, during which time poultrymen have been practically forced to sell direct to consumers in order to make any profits at all upon their investment, seem now to where decent prices must be paid for good supply. Storage eggs are still to be had for most any old price, but good eggs are now quoted at 21 cents for buying in Portland. This means they will not be sold for less than 23 cents even at the lowest, and that most dealers will probably ask more than this. This will make the retail price of eggs such that there Sievers' court Monday afternoon to explain how it happens that he owes Nellie Gallinger $20 for board and Strawberries are demoralized by

Strawberries are demoralized by the rain. Growers who have good fruit, so far advanced that the weather has not affected the quality, are getting top prices, while those who find themselves stocked with berries that will not keep are forced to unload at whatever price they can get. That is why berries are selling from 60 cents to $1.35 a crate.

Green vegetables are showing but little change in price. The meat market is reasonably firm. Interest in hop contracts seems to be but slight, even though 15 cents is being offered; and the wool trade is dull.
