FOURTH OF JULY FIFTY YEARS AGO. People Were Awaiting News of Battle of Gettysburg. FIFTY years ago this Fourth of July the people of the whole country were in a state of tremendous excitement over the battle of Gettysburg, which came to an end the day before. For three days startling rumors had been afloat. The Confederate army, under General Robert E. Lee, was in the heart of Pennsylvania. Fighting began July 1 close to the town of Gettysburg. The United States government censored all dispatches from the battlefield, but there were unofficial telegraph messages sent out from offices near the scene of operations. After the battle of July 1 a dispatch stated that the Confederates were cut in two and retreating, etc. The Army of the Potomac was in the field to combat Lee. Its commander, General Joseph Hooker, had been removed June 28, and news of that added to the anxiety of the country over the fate of the army. The government censorship of telegraph dispatches sent to the press was very rigid, but from hour to hour in a crisis like that at Gettysburg the authorities at Washington sent dispatches direct to the towns and cities to be placed on the bulletin boards. In this way the people within reach of the telegraph centers were posted at intervals during the 4th upon the latest news from the field. The battle of Gettysburg closed July 3. The morning newspaper news of that date was chiefly in the minds of the public on the Fourth except those who received the morning dailies of the Fourth. This number was a comparatively small proportion of the population. In the news printed on July 3, over which the people were ruminating on Independence day, was information of the severe battle on July 1 "near Gettysburg." The papers stated that General J. F. Reynolds of the Federal forces had been killed, that the Confederates had been "repulsed" and "driven" and were "avoiding the issue" and that General George G. Meade, the commander who succeeded Hooker, was "pressing" them. The general summary of this information which was before the people on the Fourth was that reports from the battle of Gettysburg were "not unfavorable." The morning papers of July 4 placed before their readers on Independence day the statement that the battle of Gettysburg had been the severest of the war, but contained no hint whatever of Pickett's charge, which closed the day on July 3 and closed the battle of Gettysburg. The papers also gave official news relating to the fighting of July 1 and 2. One of the newspaper headlines was, "We Took Gettysburg." A dispatch from General Meade dated at 3 p. m., July 2, the day of the terrible battle in front of Little Round Top, said that there had been no fighting of consequence that day. In one hour after that the Confederate guns opened upon General Sickles' line. A still later dispatch also appeared, dated at 8 a. m. July 3. There was no reference to the results of the fighting of the previous day, but the dispatch stated that fighting had begun on that morning. In comparison with Pickett's charge, which took place on the afternoon of July 3, this fighting of the early morning was a mere incident of the battle. Meade closed his dispatch with a statement that the Confederates "have made no impression on my position as yet." In this dispatch General Meade gave to the people whose relatives were in the army at Gettysburg food for thought by stating that the losses had been heavy. This news, taken in connection with the previous statement that the battle was the severest of war, naturally filled the minds of relatives at home with anxiety as to the fate of their loved ones at the front. General Meade stated in his dispatch that General Reynolds of Pennsylvania, Colonel E. E. Cross of New Hampshire, General Zook and General Paul had been killed. He also mentioned the wounding of General Daniel E. Sickles and some of his brigade commanders. But he said nothing of the heroic death in defense of Little Round Top of General Strong Vincent and General Stephen D. Weed. The American Flag. Let us, standing by our fathers' graves, swear anew, and teach the oath to our children, that with God's help the American republic, clasping this continent in its embrace, shall stand unmoved though all the powers of slavery, piracy and European jealousy should combine to overthrow it; that we shall have in the future, as we have had in the past, one country, one constitution and one destiny; that our sons may gather strength from our example in every contest with the despotism that time may have in store to try their virtue, and that they may rally under the stars and stripes to battle for freedom and the rights of man, with our old time warcry, "Liberty and union, now and forever, one and inseparable."--John Jay, July 4, 1861.

SHOULD WE CELEBRATE ON THE 2D OF JULY? On the 3d of July, 1776, John Adams, then one of the representatives of Massachusetts in the Continental congress, wrote to his wife, Abigail: "Yesterday the greatest question was decided which was ever debated in America, and a greater perhaps never was nor will be decided among men." In a second letter, written the same day, he said: "But the day is past. The 2d of July will be the most memorable epoch in the history of America. I am apt to believe that it will be celebrated by succeeding generations as the great anniversary festival. It ought to be commemorated as the day of deliverance by solemn acts of devotion to God Almighty. It ought to be solemnized with pomp and parade, with shows, games, sports, guns, bells, bonfires and illuminations from one end of this continent to the other, from this time forward, forevermore." When the resolution was taken up on the 2d all the states, except New York, voted to accept it. Thus on the 2d day of July, 1776, the independence of the thirteen united colonies from the throne of Great Britain was definitely decided upon. The 2d and not the 4th may be called the true date of the separation. We could with propriety celebrate the Fourth two days earlier. That the participants in the work considered the 2d as the true date is shown by the letters written by John Adams, quoted at the beginning of this article. The popular fancy, however, seized upon the Fourth, the date of acceptance of Jefferson's more dramatic declaration of the reasons for the separation, as the proper day to celebrate. The debate upon the document was continued until the afternoon of the Fourth and, says Jefferson, might have run on interminably at any other season of the year. But the weather was oppressively warm, and the hall in which the deputies sat was close to the stable. "whence the hungry flies swarmed thick and fierce, alighting on the legs of the delegates and biting hard through their thin silk stockings. Treason was preferable to discomfort." and at last the delegates were brought to such a state of mind as to agree to the Declaration without further amendment. It is a mistake to suppose that the document was signed by the delegates on that day. It is improbable that any signing was done save by John Hancock, the president of the congress, and Charles Thomson, the secretary.--Paul Leland Haworth in Harper's Magazine.
