PASSING. The great American game

THE BUCK of poker has been responsible for many of the things that today form part of the typical characteristics of people of the West; but perhaps it has brought about more perfection in the art of bluffing and passing the buck than in anything else. Bluffing is too well-known a national habit to require description here; and it is only for those unfamiliar with poker terms that it is said that "passing the buck" is the same thing as "getting out from under," or in plain English, shifting the responsibility.

For instance, when at Wednesday evening's spectacular council meeting, Councilman Tooze answered certain inquiries made by Councilman Albright in regard to an article printed in a Portland newspaper by saying that he forgave the Enterprise reporter for writing it, he was passing the buck. And when the Enterprise reporter, in turn, declared that the article was written in Portland by a Portland newspaper man who had seen Councilman Tooze, he was also passing the buck. The chief difference was that the second journey of the buck put it in the right place. This is merely mentioned as an illustration.

To go further. At the same council meeting there was considerable said about Oregon City's water, and its source of supply. The Enterprise did its best to truthfully chronicle the main features of that discussion without indicating any bias. Lack of time, and also the inappropriateness of the place, made it impossible, however, for one phase of the discussion to be more than mentioned. This subject was brought up by Councilman Holman, who remarked that quite disregarding the actual status of the water found on the Englebrecht tract, it would be well-nigh impossible to convince the people of Oregon City that this was a good source of supply. "Even if the water is the purest in the world," said Councilman Holman, "you will have to show the people that it is, and you will have to keep on showing them every day in the year."

The Enterprise believes that the members of the special water committee of the council are doing their level best to get all the information possible regarding this question of water. It believes that the several men are working desperately hard to gather statistics and information regarding all the possible sources of supply; and it accepts the declaration of Mr. Tooze, the chairman of the committee, that his only aim is to present a complete report to the citizens, and to permit them to decide what they want.

Bearing all this in mind, however, it seems to be a very general truth that Oregon City people, as a whole, doubt the advisability of continuing further investigations on the Englebrecht tract, or anywhere upon the lowlands lying along the Willamette and Clackamas rivers. Mr. Scott, who is drilling the well, says that the vein of water there struck may be seepage either from the rivers or from one of the lakes in this section; and while he declares that the natural gravel filter will purify the water, it is an established scientific fact that gravel will not clear water of the infinitesimal disease germs that cause typhoid and other diseases. As a source of water supply ought to be protected from contamination, and as the slough lands cannot be so protected—more especially as two railroad lines and a county road cross them—the people seem to be justified in mistrusting this possible source of supply.

Tacoma has recently completed a two-million-dollar pipe line, only to find that it is useless because its source of supply is not protected against contamination. Tacoma is now going to spend another half million protecting the head of its pipe line. Tacoma is doing this upon the advice of the Washington state board of health, and upon the recommendation of scientists who know whereof they speak. But Oregon City, even for half a million dollars, could not protect the possible sources of supply of the underground flows that feed the Englebrecht wells.

With this as the state of affairs, and with scientific knowledge to back it up, it does not seem just right for the special water committee to pass the buck in this matter of a source of supply up to the people. Mr. Tooze says the committee will merely lay before the people its findings. It ought to do more. It ought to make recommendations; and it ought not, under any circumstance to include the Englebrecht property in its list. The water there, filtered by gravel as it may be, is no better than the present water Oregon City is consuming—which is also filtered. The people, while they have the right to choose their own water, and while they should exercise that right, ought not to have the buck passed up to them in a matter that requires scientific knowledge and analysis. The questionable purity of the water in the second test well ought not to be left to the people—it ought to be settled by Mr. Tooze and his committee.

TECHNICALITIES. Attorneys are usually engaged to look after the interests of their clients, most often before the case, attorneys often take advantage of technicalities of the law as a means of saving their clients from punishment that should be meted out to them. There is a growing feeling among the better part of the legal profession, however, that hiding behind technicalities is a poor sort of business.

Persons who attended the trial of the mill rioters, who disturbed the peace on the 10th day of June by forcing a number of local industries to close down, had an example of this sort of thing Thursday, when an attorney for the indicted rioters told the jury that they could not convict his clients because the evidence did not show that any of them had been technically guilty of riot. As the law defines it, there can be no riot unless at least three persons act together to bring about a disturbance of the peace. The attorney for the indicted rioters claimed that no evidence had been introduced to show that any three of his clients acted together to disturb the peace.

Yet the fact remains that three of Oregon City's mills were forced to close down by interference on the part of outside persons with their operations. Damage was done in the mills. There was something going on that might well be called a riot. In view of what actually happened, it seems to be going a long ways to get around the law to declare that no crime was committed at that time unless evidence could be brought to light to show that at least three men had acted together in the disturbance. Such a defense is based upon a technicality; such a defense is a violation of the principles of justice.

Little Journeys

This is the time of year when nearly everyone is planning some kind of trip. Usually the longer the trip the pleasanter the anticipation of it is.

But there are certain kinds of journeys that are not classed as "pleasure trips" when the weather is hot. These journeys are the necessary shopping excursions.

Two women were overheard talking in the shopping district early one morning of this past week. One of them said, "I wish I could have stayed at home today. I have a list of ten things I must buy, and I know it is going to take me until closing time to get them all."

"Easily enough, I looked over the newspapers and by going through the advertisements carefully I was able to plan a regular route for my trip. I know just what shops I am going to and what I shall buy in each one."

This wise woman by her intelligent forethought made her shopping trip a pleasant "little journey." No one can afford not to follow her example in reading thoroughly the advertisements in the good newspapers when so much time and nerve-fag can be saved by doing so.

"THIS IS MY 47TH BIRTHDAY"

Princess Henry of Prussia.

Princess Henry of Prussia, wife of the only brother of the German emperor, was born July 11, 1866. The princess is closely related to several of the principal royal families of Europe. Her father was the late Grand Duke Ludwig IV, of Hesse and her mother was Princess Alice, daughter of the late Queen Victoria of England. The present Grand Duke of Hesse is her brother and the Empress of Russia is her sister. The Princess Irene as she then was known, was married to Prince Henry of Prussia in 1888. The couple have two sons. The eldest, Prince Waldemar, is twenty-four years old. Prince Sigismund, the younger, is in his seventeenth year.

CLOG THE BASES FIRST; PASS THE SLUGGERS.

Manager Stahl and the Red Sox say there is but one way to dispose of such dangerous batsmen as Ty Cobb and Joe Jackson. As Sam Crawford of the Tigers bats before Cobb and is a comparatively slow runner, the world's champions believe that by walking him and then passing Cobb the latter would be unable to steal bases or hit safely. This scheme applied to Turner, who precedes Jackson in the Cleveland batting order, would be equally successful. The Bean Eaters outlined this strategy recently without smiling.

Feeble Mindedness Would Vanish With Better Environments

By GILBERT K. CHESTERTON, English Author

JUST as the old woman in the cottage might have been silent from disappointment and hated children from bitterness and yet have been marked as a witch, so the testing of the feeble minded is TOO LOOSE and leaves out many of the complexities of life.

A lad of seventeen may be an irresponsible moon calf. It may be hereditary, but it may be all sorts of things—sometimes shyness, sometimes genius, sometimes just a pose.

Nearly all of us can remember a time when parents and school-teachers thought us not only very STUPID, but quite HOPELESSLY SO, and thought it justly, and almost every one of us knows that he is still on some point startlingly below the mental average.

Take me, for instance. I have a good memory for form and physical proportion, so that I could draw from recollection. I have a good eye for distance and direction, but in the third sense of proportion—the sense of the passage of time—I am almost an idiot. I can describe scenes and incidents of my recent life accurately, but whether they happened a week or a year ago I haven't an idea. Yet I know I SHAN'T BE SEGREGATED, AND I KNOW WHY I SHAN'T BE.

I SHAN'T BE SEGREGATED BECAUSE THIS MODERN CAMPAIGN IS FROM THE FIRST A CAMPAIGN AGAINST THOSE WHO ARE WEAK FROM IMPOVERISHMENT. GIVE THE PEOPLE GOOD CONDITIONS, IMPROVE THEIR ENVIRONMENT AND ALL WILL TEND TOWARD THE HIGHEST TYPE.
