STORIES AND THE DRAMA.

Harder Work to Write a Novel Than to Construct a Play.

One reason why a play is easier to write than a novel is that a play is shorter than a novel. On the average one may say that it takes six plays to make the matter of a novel. Other things being equal, a short work of art presents fewer difficulties than a longer one. The contrary is held true by the majority, but then the majority, having never attempted to produce a long work of art, are unqualified to offer an opinion. It is said that the most difficult form of poetry is the sonnet. But the most difficult form of poetry is the epic. The proof that the sonnet is the most difficult form is alleged to be in the fewness of perfect sonnets. There are, however, few more perfect sonnets than perfect epics. A perfect sonnet may be a heavenly accident. But such accidents can never happen to writers of epics. Some years ago we had an enormous palaver about the "art of the short story," which numerous persons who had omitted to write novels pronounced to be more difficult than the novel. But the fact remains that there are scores of perfect short stories, whereas it is doubtful whether anybody but Turgenyev ever did write a perfect novel. A short form is easier to manipulate than a long form because its construction is less complicated, because the balance of its proportions can be more easily corrected by means of a rapid survey, because it is lawful and even necessary in it to leave undone many things which are very hard to do and because the emotional strain is less prolonged. The most difficult thing in all art is to maintain the imaginative tension unslackened throughout a considerable period.—Metropolitan Magazine.

STRENUOUS LOVEMAKING. Mme. Lablanc Fairly Flung Herself at Maurice Maeterlinck. Of the wooing of Maurice Maeterlinck by Mme. Georgette Leblanc the Gil Blas tells the story as given by the lady herself. Mme. Leblanc, on reading one of the poet's volumes, said to herself, said she, "This man shall be my husband and no other." She communicated this resolution to her friends, who made her believe that Maeterlinck was an old man with one foot in the grave. What was her surprise, when the long hoped-for meeting took place, to find that he was "young and strong and beautiful." The lady ran toward the poet with a cry. But the poet bashfully recoiled, and little wonder, perhaps, for listen to Mme. Leblanc's own words: "I was like a little tigress. My heart was terribly excited, my cheeks burned, and my eyes were aflame." But there is no armor against fate, especially when fate takes the bizarre but alluring form of a "little tigress in a tight black dress with a long train and on the forehead, between the eyes, a simple blazing diamond." So continues the story of the interview: "I took his hand"—thus Mme. Leblanc—and said to him, "You are mine; you are my husband." He was disconcerted by her boldness, which had the force of a storm in a forest. He questioned me on myself and my life. Sensitive as I am, I realized that he doubted me. 'Give me the time,' I said, 'and I will gain your confidence.' Was ever poet in this manner wooed and won?

The Final Argument. By BELLE STORMS. It was the season when the roses bloom, and they were sitting together in a garden on a rustic bench enjoying the delicious perfume. He had just proposed marriage, and it would seem that their surroundings would induce that fervor which is to be expected at such times, if, indeed, the case was one of mutual love. But the lady was above such influences. She was looking at the step before her analytically. The wherewithal to keep house together did not concern her, for each possessor of those matrimonial quicksands married persons are liable to fall into and which, though she knew them not, she dreaded. "I confess," she said, "that I am predisposed in your favor, but—" "But what?" "It is not marriage with you that causes me to pause. It is marriage itself. Indeed, we hear more and more every day of the disadvantages of two persons binding themselves together for a lifetime. We hear a great deal of divorces, of marriage being a failure and lately of experimental marriage and independent marriage. These things indicate that the world has passed beyond that old-fashioned union of the sexes wherein the man provides, the woman takes care of the home and the children, and domestic life is like a field of growing cabbages." "Not a garden of roses, with their delicious perfume." "And their thorns." "What do you say to our entering upon independent marriage?" "There are many marriage contracts that may be classed under the head of independent marriage. To what particular form do you refer?" "Suppose we consent to live together as man and wife; that we may not shock society and for the sake of our children we submit to a marriage ceremony. But to us it will be a form without meaning since we will live together only so long as we both desire to do so. The finances are kept separate." A silence followed this suggestion during which the lady pondered and the man waited. "I cannot see," she said, "that your proposal can alter the case. We will be on the same footing as other married persons."

NOBODY CAN TELL IF YOU DARKEN GRAY, FADED HAIR WITH SAGE TEA. Druggist Says When Mixed With Sulphur Prevents Dandruff and Falling Hair. Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea with sulphur and alcohol added, then left to age and carefully filtered, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant; remove every bit of dandruff, stop scalp itching and falling hair. Just a few applications will prove a revelation if your hair is fading, gray or dry, scraggly and thin. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get the ready-to-use tonic, costing about 50 cents a large bottle at drug stores, known as "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy," thus avoiding a lot of muss. Some druggists make their own, but it isn't nearly so nice as "Wyeth's." While wispy, gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush and draw it through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. Do this tonight, and by morning all gray hairs have disappeared; after another application or two it will be restored to its natural color, and be even more glossy, soft and luxuriant than ever. Local druggists say they are selling lots of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur;" it surely helps folks appear years younger. HUNTLEY BROS., Druggists

Regular Army Men Praised For Part They Played In Fiftieth Anniversary of Gettysburg Battle. Photo by American Press Association. The regular army was praised for the part it played at the recent reunion at Gettysburg. Secretary of War Garrison visited the camp with General Wood and complimented General Lizzett for the arrangements. The three were snapped as shown above, the secretary in the center and General Lizzett on the left. The task of handling the 40,000 veterans was no easy one, especially because of the great crowds that visited the camp. Despite the heat and the advanced age of most of the vets the army men provided as comfortable quarters as was possible under the circumstances. There was naturally a great deal of grumbling on the part of some, and most of these left before the four day celebration was over, but for the most part the old soldiers bore up splendidly under the temporary inconveniences of camp life.

The Final Argument

By BELLE STORMS

"There is this advantage—we will feel an independence, a freedom, that we would not feel if married under the understanding that the contract was till death do us part." Again the lady maintained silence, turning the matter over in her mind. Stretching out her hand, she grasped a rose growing near her and held its stem so that its waxen petals fell against her lips while she inhaled its perfume. "I have a counter proposition to make," she said finally. "I will accept your proposal, it being understood that you are bound till death do us part. I to be free, as you have stated." It was now the man's turn to consider. He said nothing for a time, though he gave a startled glance at his companion. He was young, and this was his first serious experience with womanhood. The proposition that had just been announced seemed a trifle one-sided. "Would you consider that an equitable arrangement?" he asked. "Perfectly." "Why so?" "Because if we should not get on together—if you ill-treated me, if any of the misfortunes of marriage should come upon us—I would be free to return to my present state." "And I? What, in case of these matrimonial misfortunes—what would I do?" "These matrimonial misfortunes would not be my fault. Therefore you would have no occasion to exercise freedom." He was a law student and had the day before listened to a lecture of an eminent jurist on "contracts." It is to be wondered that this specimen of feminine jurisprudence in the abstract astonished him? "I think," he said, rising, "that I would not care to enter upon matrimony with such an understanding." "Why so?" she asked, looking up at him reproachfully. "It would avail nothing to give my reasons. I do not care to do so." "How absurd! Didn't I just give you my reasons?" "Reasons!" Do you call them reasons?" "Of course. Why not?" "Very well. I will give you mine. I am to be an attorney, perhaps some day a judge. What would I do with justice in court and such want of justice at home? Goodbye." He had taken but two or three steps when he heard a sound. Turning, he saw her holding her handkerchief to her eyes, while convulsive sobs shook her. He went back, drew down the hands and kissed away the tears. "You see," she said, still weeping, "that I was right. Just think of being ted to a man who would treat me so: "Sweetheart, I'll never do it again." He did in time become an eminent lawyer. His decisions were always confirmed by the upper courts. But when he went home he left justice in the courtroom. And yet his wife said to him one day: "I don't see how a man can be a judge with so little idea of the rights of his wife."

POTATOES GAINING IN PRICE, QUALITY. With potatoes gradually regaining strength as a market staple the trade is now reasonably firm at $1.25 per hundred. Stock is nothing to boast of in quality, but there is a growing demand, and it is expected that with the arrival of better spuds things will look brighter. The recent early summer slump in this line has been about as severe as any on record. Cantaloupes from Washington's fruit belt will be in the market today. Owing to their flavor and general perfection they will be quoted wholesale at $2.50 per case, or two-bits higher than former offerings. Demand gives promise of being brisk. Canby corn is finding favor in the buying market at from $1.25 to $2 per case. The wide range in prices is due to a considerable variance in quality and size. The second ten-cent rise in sugar has become effective in all Pacific coast markets, and is said to be ordered to equalize prices in the east and west. Offerings for hop contracts at 20 cents are being made, and local growers declare that bids will be still higher before the season is out. Scarcity of hops in European fields is given as the cause for the boom.

I. C. S. An Ethical Power. Now, gentlemen, just for a moment, I would speak to you, not as an educationalist, but as a preacher of manhood and a lover of his kind. The question of the use of alcohol by the student when studying, has carried me back to the thought, The International Correspondence Schools are not simply educational, they are ethical; they not only make foremen and craftsmen and draftsmen, but they make MEN—in capital letters. For you can never awaken any one to his commercial possibilities without stirring up all other possibilities—social, patriotic, philanthropic, intellectual, moral. The moment you succeed breaking up one area of inertia you set vibration moving through every part of the being and all kinds of dormant and stagnant powers are set into healthy motion. When a man's mind gets engrossed with an intellectual occupation and he finds that he has a grip upon the laws and forces of the universe, the saloon, the vulgar and degrading low, the curb-stone loafing, and the hours of inane and ribald waste all seem to be unworthy of him and his self-respect clothes him in a protective armor which helps to keep his entire manhood inviolate. A great American preacher used to speak much about "the explosive power of a new affection," and, having as your life work the duty of both supplying and developing this "new affection"—the love of the best, by which the unworthy and base will be expelled, perhaps unconsciously but surely, from many and many a man. Success to you in your work!
