A REAL ASSET Citizens who have observed the work of the local fire department at two recent blazes—when the Tolpolar warehouse and the lower Main street block burned—noticed with pleasure that the water pressure available was of the very best. In each case members of the water commission were prompt in getting in touch with the pumping station and in ordering pressure raised, and so quickly was this done following the sounding of the alarm that within a few minutes after hose was unreeled streams strong enough to batter down walls were turned upon the flames.

As the local department is not equipped with power engines, it is most necessary that there be at all times available some means of providing an emergency pressure in the mains; and the past two fires have shown conclusively that means are at hand for the creation of all force that may be necessary. The members of the department have at all times shown particular skill and daring in the manner in which they have attacked such fire as they have had to combat, and by these methods have saved much property. In fact, never in the history of the city, has a fire "gotten away" from the firefighters; though some desperate battles have been fought with the devouring flames.

In all their battles, and particularly in the last one, the firemen have been greatly aided by the efforts of the men at the pumping plant, who have seen to it that there is no lack of pressure when pressure was needed. This is a fact that should be borne in mind by all boosters for the city, and by every citizen, in fact; for it means a great deal more to the prosperity and progress of the community than might be suspected. If it is known that Oregon City has available for fire protection at all times a pressure sufficient to enable the department to play a stream of water over the highest building in town, not only will investors in local enterprise feel that their money is being safe-guarded but insurance rates will be lowered. Insurance rates are based, in every case, upon the fire risk. A city that has a poor fire department pays a higher rate than a city that has a good one. A city that is known to have available for emergencies an adequate pressure, will get a better rate than a city that may have a large fire department but an insufficient and unreliable water pressure. Brooklyn, N. Y., pays a higher premium for fire insurance than does New York city.

Women Are Best Fitted For Homemaking

By Dr. SIMON BARUCH, Professor of Hydrotherapy, Columbia University
I WOULD not say that genius is a masculine quality, for woman has shown the GENIUS FOR CIVILIZATION, for home building, and I believe that there is nothing that man can do that would equal the IMPORTANCE OF HOMEMAKING, of civilization. Without that what would we have amounted to? Emerson said, "The influence of good women is the test of civilization."
But whenever woman deviates from her finest feminine qualities she LOSES THE REAL POWER that enabled her to bring about civilization.
WHEN HER FEMININE QUALITIES ARE MERGED INTO MASCULINE QUALITIES SHE FAILS TO ACCOMPLISH IMPORTANT WORK.

proper, solely because there is often a dearth of water in Brooklyn, while the huge salt water mains that traverse New York make available at all times all the water that will ever be needed.
The fact that Oregon City has such a superb pressure available should be noted abroad. It should be brought to the attention of fire insurance companies and underwriters. It should be included in every bit of boosting that is done by the city, the Commercial club or the individual citizens. It should be kept always in mind, for when it is realized that there is this pressure, insurance rates—that are now unreasonably high—will be lowered. And also, when it becomes generally known, new enterprise and new industry will be attracted here, primarily because it will be realized that Oregon City is in such a position that it can "smother" any blaze that may break out within its limits.

BE SURE Most of the voters of TO VOTE Clackamas county have, by this time, pretty thoroughly determined the way in which they will vote when they go into the booths on Saturday.

They have heard Judge Beattie and Commissioner Blair defend their conduct and management of the county affairs, and have listened to those who would remove the present officials from office. The issues of the campaign have been presented in the various precincts of the county, and nearly every voter is informed as to the position of both factions in the campaign.
But there are, perhaps, some who do not feel a personal interest in the outcome of Saturday's election, either the one way or the other. They have manifested some indifference through the course of the fight that has raged for the past few weeks. They will even argue that the personnel of the county court is not a matter of supreme importance to them, nor is the question of whether or not the present officials are recalled of any particular moment in their affairs.
Saturday's election, however, means more than the mere personnel of the Clackamas county court. It is a test of the interest that the citizens of Oregon display in their public affairs, an evidence of whether or not the recall law is an important factor in the administration of their public business.

It is, therefore, the duty of every qualified voter in the county to register his decision in the ballot boxes of his precinct on Saturday. The people of the county have been sitting as a jury for the past few weeks, and it now becomes their duty to register the verdict that has been formed in their minds after the arguments are all and fully presented. Indifference to the importance of this duty is an injury to the county, because it results in a failure to get the true sentiment of the voting population on public matters.
The total voting strength of the county should be registered when the ballots are counted Saturday night. Every voter should have expressed his decision on the merits of the issues that are involved, and the importance of those issues makes his vote a matter of public concern.

"THIS IS MY 58TH BIRTHDAY"
Walter H. Page
Walter H. Page, the new United States ambassador to the court of St.

James, was born in the village of Cary N. C. August 15, 1855. He attended Randolph-Macon college in Virginia, and his academic training was broadened by further study at John Hopkins University. Having chosen a literary career, Mr. Page fell naturally into magazine work and journalism. His first edit of the local paper in his native town and from that he went to St. Joseph, Mo., to succeed Eugene F. on the Gazette. He wrote for a prominent magazine a social study of an old Southern borough, which led to engagements to travel through the South as a correspondent of a New York newspaper. He remained with the newspaper two years, and in his capacity of special correspondent visited Utah to investigate the Mormon problem. Subsequently he became editor of a New York newspaper. Of late years Mr. Page has been employed as editor and literary adviser on several of the best known American magazines.

Congratulations to:
Mrs. John A. Logan widow of the famous soldier, 75 years old today.
Miss Ethel Barrymore, celebrated actress, 34 years old today.

J. Keir Hardie, noted labor leader and member of the British parliament, 57 years old today.
Maarten Maartens, the foremost figure in the literary world of Holland, 55 years old today.

Heart to Heart Talks

HERE'S A YOUNG-OLD MAN.
Dr. J. M. Peebles of Los Angeles is planning to make his sixth trip around the world in the fall of 1915. Dr. Peebles returned recently from his fifth trip.
To most folks of ninety-one a trip around the world would be something to think about, perhaps, but not to undertake. But Dr. Peebles believes firmly that he will make that trip two years from now, when he will be ninety-three.
Here's hoping nothing occurs to disappoint him!
When Dr. Peebles got back to New York the other day the newspaper men wanted to know all about his trip abroad. In spite of the improved means of travel, transoceanic voyagers of ninety-one are not yet common.
"What is the real secret of your vitality?" he was asked.
"Just behaving myself, proper living and always being up and doing account for it," said Dr. Peebles. "I have the will power to compel myself to do things instead of sitting in a corner talking about the bygone days."
Isn't that a fine plan for a man of ninety-one?
Reverse the figures. It's a good plan for the man or woman of nineteen as well as for the person of ninety-one.
In fact, any age between nineteen and ninety-one or on either side of these figures will do well to "compel itself to do things."
The doing of things that are worth while depends on compulsion from within, not urging from without. You note that the doctor said, "I compel MYSELF to do things." He did not say. "I find myself compelled to do things."

See the difference? Most of us have not reached the age when the doctor's remark about "sitting in a corner talking about the bygone days" applies to us. We have yet work to do, hills of accomplishment to scale, haven't we?
WE mean all of us, of any age.
The feeling of age is not always expressed in years. Some men of thirty-five are older than others of ninety. They are the ones who sit in the corner and talk about the old times.
The others are up and doing. The frost on their hair does not chill the ardor in their hearts and minds. There may be rheumatism in their joints, but there is none in their mentality, in their interest in life. Their grandchildren's affairs are theirs.
With the lengthening term of man's life on earth, due to medical discoveries and the spread of sanitation; with the improved methods of disseminating intelligence among all classes of people, there is very little excuse for any one's growing old.
We can all start with Dr. Peebles on voyages around the world—mentally, if not in person.

JENNY KISSED ME.
Jenny kissed me when we met,
Jumping from the chair she sat in,
Time, you thief! Who love to get
Sweets into your list put that in.
Say I'm weary, say I'm sad,
Say that health and wealth have missed me,
Say I'm growing old, but add—
Jenny kissed me.
—Leigh Hunt.

Though the demand for eggs is at a standstill in the markets, the prices for chickens are firm and the call is good. For the past few days, the egg demand has been weak and the supply has been heavier than in a long time. The cold storage men everywhere are nervous over the situation and the supplies are being withdrawn from the lockhouses with the steady impounding of the fresh stock. The tone is weak and the demand dragging with no snap or vigor in the business.
Chickens, on the other hand, have been in demand and the supply has been able to care for a steadily increasing demand. The cantaloupe market has been overstocked by the influx of the local produce. The
