CITY OFFICIAL NEWSPAPER

A NEW Oregon City really needs a new federal building. So many POSTOFFICE cities of the country have pestered their senators and reptesentatives into forcing amendments to the appropriation bills of the government that the expenditures have grown enormously years by year and the bill has become to be regarded as the "pork barrel" of congess.

But the lavish extravagances of congress in the past and the woeful dis regard of the nation's funds that have been shown on the part of many of the representatives in the national body is no excuse for the neglect that Oregon City has suffered for proper postal facilities.

The oldest town in the state is no longer a village. It is now a rapidly growing and a thriving community. Its postoffice receives a volume of mail daily that is a credit to any city in the country with a much larger population. There is now no reason why the postoffice of the town should be stuck off in a dark hole between a real estate office and a business house and that strangers should have to search the windows as they pass for a sign that would give them an inkling of the place in which Uncle Sam tran sacts his business here.

The Commercial club is on the right track when it believes that the time has now come when the government should take steps to give the city a better postoffice. When the representative of the postal department, Paul E. Keyser, arrives in town for the annual convention of the letter carriers, he should be shown just the conditions under which the postmaster and his assistants labor to promptly and efficeiently handle the public business.

After he has all of the facts at his finger's end, there will be little question as to the kind of a report that he would make to the department chiefs. Nothing is so stubborn in its ways as an incontrovertible fact, and has helped to win three league Neither is there a more incontrovertible fact than that Oregon City has been scandalously neglected by the government in its provision for postoffice accomodations.

THE MASHER The pestus masheritis is a disease that ought to be ex-PEST terminated by as stringent measures as the police can enforce, under the laws of the city and the state. In some men, it seems to be an uncontrollable impulse that makes them hang around street corners and insult every girl who crosses their path.

The loafers around cigar stores and saloons are most guilty of it and the disease has become so prevalant as to make it almost impossible for a woman or a girl to walk down one of the streets of the city without some whelp on the corner feeling called upon to make comments upon her or upon her appearance.

There is really nothing quite so disgusting as one of these conceited "beaux brummels" in the community. A masher, as a general thing, is nothing more nor less than a concentrated package of unadulterated conceit. If he didn't believe that he was a handsome chap and that the girls were all dead in love with him, he certainly would never have the nerve to speak to a woman whom he did not know when he met her on the street.

He that will not economize will have

Were she with some man, he would be the last person on earth to recognize her presence on the street and would fade away out of sight were her escort to even suspect E. E. BRODIE - - - - - Editor and Publisher that he had attempted to insult the woman in any way.

A masher is above all things cowardly. He is a nuisance that ought to be put out of the way as quickly as it can be done under the law. It is the earnest hope of The Enterprise that Chief of Police Shaw and his force will make every effort to eradicate the pest in Oregon City and that every masher who insults a woman on the streets be given nothing less than 30 days on the rock pile.

If a man is not respectful toward a woman whom he meets, if he hasn't the first elements of chivalry in his make-up, if he doesn't think enough of his own mother or sister to realize what it means to a woman when a strange man speaks to her in public, there is nothing that is more wholesome or effective to instill in him those principles and elements of training that he lacks than the golden opportunity to make little rocks out of big ones under the supervision of an amiable chief of police.

The incident Friday when a young woman of the city was followed for blocks by a would-be masher and had to run into the ice house for protections is disgusting to any man who has any respect whatever for wo-

Any man would take violent measures with a masher who had insulted any of the feminine members of his family on the street. Oregon City is a big family whose only punitive force is the department of police. That arm should be exercised as rigorously against the man who insults an unprotected woman as it would be were the incident to happen in the family of any member of the force. There, is no cure for the masher but the

THE LOVE OF THE GAME.

"the peerless Matty," has been a great figure in the world of baseball. He has been the mainstay of his team. the New York National League Giants, pennants and one world's champion-

Other men have lasted longer in "big league ball" than Mathewson, but no other has so brilliant a record.

To-day, although only thirty-three years old, he is an old timer, as baseball players are rated.

But he holds his own. He is still one of the leading pitchers, one of the most dependable of players. When he steps into the pitching box the men behind him, his teammates, feel confident that they will win the game.

The matter was discussed a few days ago by some leading players, all of whom know Matty.

And this is the reason, the true reason, for his lasting powers and his supremacy as a player

"It is because he loves the game," said one man "He puts his heart in it. It is his lifework." There is the secret, if it can be called a secret Matty loves the game. Therefore he plays it as well as he does There is another reason. It was given out by Manager McGraw, Mathewson's superior and friend, a few years ago.

"The big fellow never has to go into training in the spring to get into condition," said McGraw. "He keeps himself in condition all the time. He does not have to tune himself up He is ready to play ball at any time."

Love of the game and perfect condition all the time!

The two conditions work for success in baseball. They are good rules in all games and in all labors and professions. If you "love the game," if you teel that the work in which you are engaged is worthy of you and keep yourself in the proper mental and physical condition to do it you will succeed as Mathewson has succeeded.

If you let yourself "go stale" and lose interest in the game you will join the long line of failures.

Mathewson in his long baseball career has outlasted many other pitchers. Some of them were praised on their first appearance as "second Mathewsons" or "better than Matty." They did not love the game enough

They took insufficient care of them

As Matty has lasted and will live for all time in baseball history, so may any man make a great name for himself in his chosen field if he will ob-

Where the Feet Perspire Profusely. This is a very great cause of corns and general pains in the feet and the cure is so simple that it is neglected. Frequent bathing in cold water, with centle massage, will do more toward pelping this trouble than almost anything, yet few but fill their perspiring feet with some sort of powder, which logs the pores and in the end makes natiers worse. A good formula is to mix one ounce powdered alum with two of sait and one of horax. Put half Food Magazina Rich Ducal Estates In England With Curious Rental.

It is not generally known that or the anniversary of Waterloo each year -June 18, 1815, was the original daythe Duke of Wellington is required to present the sovereign with a new flag bearing the French colors as an acknowledgment that his grace holds the manor of Strathfieldsave at the will and pleasure of the king, that estate having been presented to the Iron Duke as a national gift for his success over Napoleon at Waterloo

The ceremony of the presentation of the flag is today much shorn of its ancient glory, for formerly the ruling duke used to bring the trophy himself on horseback and personally offered it to the monarch. Nowadays it is sent by deputy, however, and is then placed hy some appointed equerry in the position assigned to it-namely, over the murble bust of the old Duke of Wellington that stands on its pedestal in the guardroom at Windsor castle. The flag which has rested there during the preceding year is then taken down and returned to the duke's messenger.

It is on the special condition of thus rendering this annual tribute of feudal service, as we may call it, that the reigning duke is allowed to retain the splendid estate already mentioned. If he omits to send the banner on the proper day he forfeits the right to the

The same principle applies to the beautiful domains of Blenheim held by the Duke of Marlborough, who simflarly has to send a new flag on each anniversary of the battle (Aug. 13. 1704) The banner is placed over the bust of the noted Duke of Marlborough, also in the guardroom at Windsor -London Ba

A Mutual Admiration Society

By ESTHER VANDEVEER

Mrs. Middleton-Tranby is a sort of Mrs. Leo Hunter, in whom Dickens satirized a woman ambitious to shine this night and morning and there will as a literary star and to entertain litthe hose getting greasy during the Tranby was not the caricature Mrs. Leo Hunter was and lived in the twentieth instead of the nineteenth century.

Among the literary salons given by Mrs. Tranby (the whole name is too long for repetition; was one where a professor of German literature in a prominent university was to address the company. The professor, who was as unpretentions as his name, which was Brown, did not know when he accepted the invitation that he was to speak to a mutual admiration society. His address was to be in the afternoon, and half an hour before he was to appear on the rostrum he stepped into a trolley car which would carry him direct to the residence of Mrs. Tranby. He seated himself, took a newspaper from his pocket and began to read.

Presently two ladies entered the car, sat down opposite the professor and began to chat. There were various noises connected with the journey. such as the conductor's bell ringing and vehicles rattling over the stones without, and the ladies found it difficult to modulate their voices.

"Have you read Mrs. Middleton-Tranby's latest poem in the - Maga zine?" asked one lady, who wore something like a muff for a hat on her bead. "Yes. Isn't it lovely?"

"Beautiful! But it doesn't compare with your 'My Rover." "Don't you think so? It's awfully good of you to say so."

"I love dogs, and the close of your poem, when your dog looks up at you so expressively before he dies, is just too lovely for anything."

"Thank you ever so much. Have you been writing anything?" "Nothing in verse. I have a story I'm going to read at the next meeting of our literary society. I've spent a lot of time over it, which I fear may have been wasted. When I write a poem I dash it right off without thinking, and it's better than when I take pains. "That's genius. I wish we were going to listen to your story this afternoon at Mrs. Middleton-Tranby's instead of having to listen to that professor. I think our meetings when we read our own papers are so much more interesting." "So do I. 'I don't care for German literature. There is so much philosophy mixed up in it." "Mrs. Engleheart's paper on 'Goethe.' read at our last meeting, was very good." "Good! It was delightful! But then we are all so familiar with the opera of 'Faust' that Goethe has a special charm for us"

"What's the name of the professor who is to lecture this afternoon? "Brown, I believe."

"Brown! He isn't the Professor Brown whose loose ideas on marriage have excited so much comment? I believe the trustees of his university ask ed him to resign-Cuthbert Brown professor of something or other, I don't remember.

"I think that's the man who is to speak this afternoon, but I'm not

"If it is I shall not remain for the lecture." "You'd better be careful. You know

Mrs. Middleton-Tranov has her touris husband, all the other three still living. "I didn't think of that. Ever s much obliged to you for mentioning it. Of course it wouldn't do to offend hostess. Besides, I rather like to hear what horrid theories people will promulgate."

"I can stand a bit of spice myself. If this man Brown doesn't advocate positive free love I rather think I shall hear him out. But, since he is to speak on German literature, perhaps be won't mention his peculiar ideas."

"Possibly not, but so long as he holds them and we have to listen to him it would be disappointing to have him stick to his dull subject."

By this time the car had reached a cross street leading to Mrs. Middleton-Tranby's residence, and the ladies alighted. They were followed by Professor Brown-Charles, not Cuthbert, Brown and a husband and father of six children-who lagged behind them, so that when they entered the Tranby residence they did so without having noticed that he had followed them.

"Let's go right into the lecture room." said one, "and get seats where we can hear. I'm a sittle deaf." They took seats in the front row, and when the room had been filled behind them the lecturer, with Mrs. Middleton-Tranby, passed down an aisle, and they mounted the platform together. "Great heavens!" exclaimed the lady with the muff hat. "It is the man who sat opposite us in the car."

We must go. "How can we? It's impossible." have got to stay it out."

The lecturer, having been introduced by the hostess, cast one meaning glance down at the ladies directly beneath him, then delivered his lecture. It was considered rather dry by his audience. It contained no reference whatever to marriage, experimental mar riage or any of the substitutes which theorists are suggesting for the good old days of domestic love and large families.
