CITY OFFICIAL NEWSPAPER

VITAL ANSWER Though the state board of health has been investigating conditions in Oregon City that have been responsible for the typhoid fever epidemic that has prevailed here so many weeks, it has yet failed to make a report to the city officials that would guide them in the extermination of the disease or help them in any way to place the source of that disease under control.

To the people of the city, the answer to that question is a vital matter. They want to know what the board has found. If there is any local fault that could be remedied, there is no reason why the city officials should be kept in the dark and that the cloak of mystery should be placed around the investigations of the officers of the board.

Only by a concise knowledge of the place where the fault lies and the dissemination of that knowledge among the people of the community can there be an absolute check placed upon the ravages of the disease. Mystery never helps any sort of a health campaign. The only solution to a problem of the kind that now faces the city is full and complete knowledge of the conditions that exist here. Such information can be furnished by the officers of the state board who have made extensive investigations of the source and probable cause of the disease, and that data that has now been collected should be placed at once in the hands of the city officials and distributed by them to the people of the community.

When the state officers began their work, the city health department ceased its study of the problem. It believed at that time that its investigations would but duplicate that of the board. The only agency that now has the information that the people want is the state of Oregon, through its board of health. The city officials have not been consulted during the investigation, they have not been taken into the confidence of any of the doctors who have been sent into the city to study the cases.

Tuesday, a newsboy became the first victim of the epidemic. It is time that something was done to stop the toll of disease. Though the people of the community have been fortunate in losing but one out of the number who have fallen victims to the typhoid bacilli, there is no excuse for further delay in arriving at the vital reason for the contagion and in employing the most stringent methods and measures known to the world of science and medicine for its extermination. Why should the board delay a report that means so much to a community as does the solution of this problem? The disease may take its toll of health and even of lives unhindered unless the state officials step in at once and tell the officers of Oregon City just where the trouble lies and the methods that must be taken to relieve the city of the epidemic that now, apparently, has the upper hand.

It is incumbent on the investigators to do something. The city officials feel that there has been enough delay. They believe that the board has had ample time in which to study the cases that have been reported to it and in arriving at some solution of the difficulty. There is now no reason why that vital answer should not be received. At least, the men in charge of the city government should know that the board has been at work here, but thus far the only information that has been given to them has been through the columns of the daily press.

THIS picture illustrates a splendid educational project. It shows children from the poor districts of New York City being taught all about street cars—how to get on and off without falling, how to avoid being run down and in general how to take care of themselves when playing or walking in the street. The picture was taken during a class object lesson at the American Institute of Safety in New York, an organization for the benefit of the poor in which Andrew Carnegie and other philanthropists are interested. The tots are taught by means of a model street car. They are also taught many kind of street games to play and other things of a practical nature.

NEW FRIENDSHIPS.

The "Open Sesame" of Good Fellowship Is Kindness and Sympathy. A young married woman with her husband was about to leave the town in which she had been born, raised and married, to make her home in another state where an excellent business opportunity had been offered to her husband. On the eve of departure she was expressing to some of her friends her regret at leaving, and assuring them that never would she find in her new home the valued and loving friends from whom she was going away. Her old grandfather heard her, and putting a hand on her shoulder, he said: "My dear, when you go to your new home take with you one thing. Show to every one with whom you come in contact that kindness and sympathy which is their due, and most important of all, respect the rights of others, and you will find no lack of friends and neighbors in your new home town."

The young bride took his advice, and in the new town where she and her husband made their home they find that this policy has made them friends by the score. In these words of wisdom of the old grandfather lay the key to their happiness in their new home.

Congratulations to: Archbishop Riordan of San Francisco, 72 years old today. Dr. James H. Linford, president of Brigham Young College, 50 years old today. Dorsey W. Most American Business Men Honest

By HARRY G. WHEELER, President of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States

THE indiscriminate attacks made upon business generally on the public platform and in the daily and periodical press of the country is UNJUST.

The popular prejudice which was first roused against the railroad has extended its line of attack to include the industrial life of the nation and the profession of banking. Popular sentiment has it that all who have been successful in the accumulation of wealth have become so by predatory means and that ROTTENNESS UNDERLIES THE ENTIRE COMMERCIAL FABRIC OF THE NATION.

As an argument for the larger governmental regulation of business, one of the candidates in the last presidential campaign repeatedly declared that the business interests of the country were engaged in a CHAOTIC STRUGGLE TO DEVOUR EACH OTHER and that all were combined in an effort to enslave the workingman.

For ten years this campaign of misrepresentation has been going on, with little or no contradiction on the part of business.

NINETY PER CENT OF BUSINESS IS HONEST. THE AMERICAN BUSINESS MAN STANDS IN THE FOREFRONT OF THOSE WHO ADHERE TO THE HIGHEST PRINCIPLES OF HONOR AND INTEGRITY, BUT SINGLE HANDED HE HAS BEEN POWERLESS TO PRESENT A PROPER DEFENSE.

DRESS AND WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

To me the fashions of today ought to convince any one that a woman is not fit to vote. Some women's dress is not only extreme; it is objectionable. Woman would do more good by correcting the dances in our cafes and cabarets than in running for office. If I were in a suffragist state I would certainly cast my vote, because I would consider that a duty. But I have always announced that I was not for suffrage. I do not say that women should be tied down to the home, but I think there are many things they might do without actually breaking into politics. Mr. Marshall is more of a suffragist than I am. The women in the east are not strongly in favor of the ballot, and none of the cabinet women seems to favor it, with the exception, perhaps, of the president's daughter, Miss Jessie Wilson—Mrs. Thomas R. Marshall.

An Easy Egg Dish.

Mix equal quantities of water and good veal gravy, two tablespoonfuls of each, with a teaspoonful of vinegar and a seasoning of pepper and salt. Put the whole in a stewpan, and stir in gradually the yolks of two well-beaten eggs. When it thickens, and before it boils, have ready half a dozen nicely poached eggs. Pour the sauce over them, garnish with parsley and serve promptly. This is an excellent emergency dish, and only takes about ten minutes to prepare.

Heart to Heart Talks

YOUR CAUSE OR YOURSELF?

In measuring the devotion of a man to a cause, to an ideal, to any movement which he believes to be right, this is the standard:

How far is he willing to sink himself in his cause?

If he lets the finchery of self color the fluid of his devotion, he is lukewarm; he is of those who give the right hand and withhold with the left. The waters of work and willingness and sacrifice that are poured out for whatever you believe to be right must be crystal clear; they must now show traces of self.

Thus it has ever been with the great, the truly great of the earth. Above themselves they have placed the cause for which they toiled and fought.

The army of the Potomac needed a new commander, in the opinion of the north and the military authorities in Washington. One man after another was suggested. Lincoln decided to appoint " Fighting Joe" Hooker.

"What, Hooker?" said the friends of the president. "Why, that man has been going about criticizing you."

And here shone out the greatness of the soul of Lincoln:

"Hooker is a good general," he said. "He has the confidence of the people. It makes no difference what he thinks of me."

In appointing Hooker, Lincoln wrote to him:

"I have heard, in such a way as to believe it of your recently saying that both the army and the government needed a dictator. Of course it was not for this, but in spite of it, that I have given you the command."

Despite his faults, Hooker was a good general and a firm Union man. In few things was Lincoln more great than in his power of judging men and their motives.

But the moral is this: A smaller man than Lincoln would have resented Hooker's criticism of himself. He would have placed himself above the task then set to do, that of saving the Union. To replace Burnside, he would have appointed one of the many other generals of the north willing and anxious to take up the burden.

But he thought Hooker the best man. So he chose Hooker. He placed his country, his cause, above himself.

When you have work to do, you must choose your tool according to the task, not according to its difficulty of handling. You must ask:

"Will it enable me to do the work? That is the true test."

PERSEVERANCE.

We have not wings, we cannot soar; But we have feet to scale and climb By slow degrees, by more and more. The cloudy summits of our time.

The mighty pyramids of stone That wedge-like cleave the desert air, When nearer seen and better known, Are but gigantic flights of stairs.

The distant mountains that up-rear Their solid bastions to the skies Are crossed by pathways that appear As we to higher levels rise.

The heights by great men reached and kept Were not attained by sudden flight, But they, while their companions slept, Were toiling upward in the night.

SUMMER BRASSIERES.

Expensive to Buy, They Are Exceedingly Easy and Cheap to Make. Now that the corsetless figure is in style and corsets are made so low in the bust, the average woman is obliged to wear a brassiere, or in other words, a sort of corset cover that is corded or boned to fit the form.

These brassieres are quite expensive when purchased in the shops, but they are exceedingly easy to fashion at home.

is made from allover strong eyelet embroidery. It consists of nothing more than two front pieces with boned darts and a back portion. To conceal the front closing wide embroidery heading is used down the center through which ribbon is run. A loop is left at the end for securing to the corset. Ribbon is run at the top of the brassier and forms straps over the shoulders. Another one of the brassieres illustrated is more elaborate, being of net with pretty ribbon ornaments and floral garnitures.

The third is of embroidery allover with insertion and lace trimmings.
