It is a hard task to get an appropriation bill through congress and it is becoming harder all of the time. But there is, to my mind, no question that you need a new office.'

TRAVELING ENGLISHMEN.

They're Prepared For Anything, From Golf to Sudden Death.

The equipment of the traveling Engtishman is the eighth wonder of the world. He is ready for any emergency from golf to sudden death. I recollect suce being in a compartment on the Paris boat train with an English famfly and their luggage, and I do not remember ever being so pleasantly entertained as I was on that trip. As to the luggage, there were twenty-nine pieces of the hand variety which it took pater a half hour to dovetail into the racks while the train stood in the dingy station at Calais and another half hour to pry out when we reached the dreadful Gare du Nord,

This was only a detail, however, and I have never in my life seen a man work harder to get a family of three women comfortably settled. It was in vain that they protested against more wraps and rugs, against smelling saits and speckled fruit. Being a man, he knew so much better than they what they needed, and he gently but firmly had his way.

Finally he dozed off to sleep, resting audibly from his labors. He had taken off his great coat with its amazing capes and pockets, and as his coattails became parted in his somnolent writhings I plainly saw a good sized holster protruding through the aforesaid conttails, evidently strapped around his portly waist. "Aha!" I said to myself, "here we have a mystery! My comrade is perhaps a spy en route to Germany." This holster-with its supposed brace of firearms-fascinated me unspeakably, and about it I built a lovely blood curdling romance as we sped on through the monotonous French country. Finally my neighbor awoke, rosy and refreshed, and upon one of his daughters asking him some question about Paris he unbuckled the bolster, took it off and, while I watched with bulging eyes, opened it and calmly extracted-a guide book. ATHLETICS AND GIANTS MAY MEET

Looks as If Two Teams Will Clash In World Series.

MACKMEN OUTCLASS RIVALS

Philadelphia Has Better Infield, Outfield. Batters and Base Runners. Giants Have Stronger Pitching Staff. Mack Using Clever Methods,

By TOMMY CLARK. When the Giants and the Athletics come together in the world's series this fall (how's that for predicting it?) one can hardly have good reasons to back the Glants' end of the argument. The team is outclassed by the Mackmen in every department but pitching. The Athletics have a better infield, outer garden and catching department than the New Yorkers. They also are heavier hitters, better base runners and fielders than McGraw's outfit.

New York is well fixed for twirlers. Mathewson, Marquard, Tesreau, Demaree, Frontine, Wiltse and Crandall are all in better shape than any in the league and capable of twirling good ball.

The Athletics' pitching has not been the best all season. The Mackmen have won the great majority of their games by main strength of swatting. Mack has such offensive strength that he can worry along in pitching relays and keep well in front playing a game a day.

Mack has handled his pitchers in clever style all season and has resorted to all kinds of tricks. Here is one he pulled off on Washington recently: Before a recent game Mack had Bender and Plank warming up before the players' bench, indicating that one or the other would pitch. In the meantime, Joe Bush was behind the grandstand loosening up his arm. The Bender-Plank display was for the purpose of drawing Johnson out of Griffith, and it succeeded, but as soon as Johnson had been announced Mack switched to Bush, not wanting to take a chance of having one of his two stars beaten by Johnson, reserving them for an easier game, thus making their games certain victories, is the way he figured.

As it happened, Bush won his game, and, though Bender had to be used at the finish, it left him (Mack) Plank and Bender to be used in the remaining games

Mack has made remarkable improve ment in the work of his young pitchers. None of them are stars, but he has taught them enough to have them formidable for five or six innings anyway, and in that way he is able to win games, for he can let one of his veterans finish the games during the closing innings without affecting their

HIS actual picture of one of the most daring feats in the history of aviation records Oscar Bider's wonderful flight across the Bernese Alps. The plucky Swiss air man flew from Berne, Switzerland, across the great range of snow capped peaks to Milan, Italy. The photograph was taken as the mountain filer passed over Jungfrau Jock, which is 12,000 feet above sea level. The watchers saw the death defying aviator soar away between innumerable peaks over Europe's greatest glacier, the Aletsch, like some human bird of prey. His flight was a complete success.
