REPUBLICANS WIN The vote in Maine is indicative of the change of sentiment that is slowly making its way over the country since the democratic forces have been given the supreme power in the national capital.

All over the country, the sentiment that put the democrats in the places of authority has been steadily changing and the Republican forces have been gaining ground wherever they have placed their campaign, as in Maine, upon the national issues.

The Progressive strength has fallen down, at the same time, and the votes that in some states turned the tide in favor of the third party have swung back into line and have supported the Republican candidates wherever the opportunity offered.

Changes like these are indicative of the sentiment that has now taken its hold upon the electors of the country and show, to a certainty, that the people have changed their minds on many of the principles that induced their ballots during the November campaign.

Wilson's personality was, to a large extent, effective in bringing out voters undecided in their views to an alignment with the party principles of the democratic forces and may, in a great measure, be held responsible for the success of that party at the polls last year.

Not so much the principles by which the party is guided but the personality of the man who was chosen to lead that party to success or failure effected the voters in that campaign and induced them to try the lead of a party other than the one with whom they had been affiliated in former campaigns.

It is today Wilson's personalty, his grip on the national affairs, his ability to study and digest the important issues of every problem that is presented to him that gives the party its hold over the people of the republic rather than the principles that he and that party advocated during the campaign days or that they now advocate and sometimes put into service.

Whatever party success the democrats may have, whatever permanent and beneficial results they may achieve for the national welfare may be directly chargeable to Wilson and his ability to handle the machine for the benefit of the country at large rather than for those who, through their wealth, have attained a national prominence in political affairs.

Wilson, however, will not be able to save the party by himself. He is constantly embarrassed by one William Jennings Bryan of Nebraska whose ideas and theories are so conflicting with the practical common sense of the chief executive that they seldom pull along the same line. Not only that, but in Maine, as an example, the candidates complain of party treachery and declare that the recent result in favor of the Republican candidate for the national assembly was due to the men who were disappointed in their own aims and ambitions and who were willing to sacrifice the party's success at the polls to revenge themselves upon those who had been responsible for the failure of their aspirations.

In crucial moment of campaign years, party loyalty means success at the polls. Party disloyalty inevitably means defeat. In politics, as in other affairs, a "house divided against itself cannot stand." The democrats have, all along, failed to reveal that skillful generalship in their congressional and district campaigns that is daily shown in the lower house and in the executive chambers when Oscar Underwood and Woodrow Wilson plan and manage the party maneuvers for their various pet enactments.

In the democratic ranks, there are but two men who stand out as national leaders. Those two men are the chief executive and the majority floor leader of the house. They have, what few democrats seem to have, the ability to force their colleagues into line and to direct that phalanx against the Republican ramparts to success.

STREET NUMBERING Oregon City needs a new system of street numbering. The town has outgrown the village stage when everybody knows where everybody else lives and has reached the point where accurate addresses are needed on every house or place of business within the city limits.

Under present conditions, only about one house in ten has a street number. Through the business section, the leading stores are without correct addresses and the stranger is often puzzled in his effort to locate even some of the most prominent merchants of the city.

Such conditions should not exist in a town that is growing as rapidly and has developed so many metropolitan features as has Oregon City and some way should be selected by the council at its next meeting to systematize the street numbering through the city.

In some places, the owners have used over their doors any numbers that happened to strike their fancy without regard to those on the houses of their neighbors or on the rest of the street. As a result, the system, or rather lack of it, has caused endless confusion at times and should be straightened out by a regular meeting of the council that would officially number every house and place of business within the city limits.

Very little effort on the part of the council or its officers would give the city a correct system of street numbering and would do away with the confusion that is now inevitable whenever a stranger tries to locate some particular house or place of business.

Oregon City should have as up to date methods in its street numbering as should other cities of the state. The council could, at a very small expense, place proper street signs at the intersections and label the thoroughfares through the residence as well as the business districts for the benefit of the stranger and the newcomer into the town.

H. who can tell what deeds were done
When Britain's cross on yonder wave
Sunk 'neath Columbia's dazzling sun
And met in Erie's food it's grave?
Who tell the triumphs of that day
When, smiling at the cannon's roar
Our hero mid the bloody fray
Conquered on Erie's echoing shore?

Though many a wounded bosom bleeds
For sire, for son, for lover dear,
Yet sorrow smiles amid her weeds;
Affliction dries her tender tear.
Oh, she exclaims, with glowing pride,
With ardent thoughts that wildly soar,
My sire, my son, my lover died
Conquering on Erie's bloody shore.

Long shall my country bless that day
When soared our eagle to the skies
Long, long in triumph's bright array
That victory shall proudly rise,
And when our country's lights are shown
In all its prouddest days are o'er
How will her fading courage dawn
To think on Erie's bloody shore!

As for life, it is a battle and a sojourn in a strange land, but the fame that comes after is oblivion.

The universe is change. Our life is what our thoughts make it.

It's Our Duty to Conserve Human Life
Lay Basis For Nation's Health In Schools

By DAVID STARR JORDAN, Former President of Leland Stanford University

It has been estimated that the money value to society of the average human life is about TWO THOUSAND NINE HUNDRED DOLLARS. On this basis our vital assets could be reckoned at, roughly, TWO HUNDRED AND FIFTY BILLION DOLLARS. Against this set the one hundred and ten billions of dollars at which the physical wealth of the United States is figured, and even the most arrant materialist will admit that the conservation of human life is more important than the conservation of forests or the eradication of diseases among cattle and hogs.

THE MOST PROMISING FIELD FOR CONSERVING LIFE AND HEALTH IS THE UNFORMED AND STILL PLASTIC CHILD. TARIFF MAKING, COINAGE, BANKING AND SUCH ARE COMPARATIVELY INCIDENTAL ISSUES IN THIS FUNDAMENTAL PROBLEM OF RAISING THE PHYSICAL, MENTAL AND MORAL LEVEL OF THE NEXT GENERATION. THIS LEADS US DIRECTLY TO THE TEACHER AND THE SCHOOLROOM.

Wholesome habits of living cannot be legislated into men and women, but the health habits of the young can certainly be influenced and foreshaped. MEDICAL INSPECTION OF SCHOOLS, which began as a reflection of popular interest in matters of health, will end by becoming a most effective means for the attainment of a HIGHER NATIONAL VITALITY.

"Medical inspection" has already become "health supervision" and the latter is rapidly including more effective methods of HEALTH TEACHING. The main purpose of health teaching is not so much to inculcate knowledge about diseases as to insure habits of living which will enable children to escape diseases and inefficiency. The school hygiene of today is not the school hygiene of yesterday, but infinitely broader. It has earnestly attacked the whole problem of child welfare. And this is right, for there is no other institution through the agency of which we can come so near REACHING ALL THE CHILDREN OF ALL THE FAITH.

Does the way seem dark, my brother?
Can you see no ray of light?
Do malicious foes surround you Day by day, and e'en at night?

Have those you prized most dearly failed you
When your day was dark as night?
Has your path been steep and cross strewn
Whilst fighting bravely for the right?

Courage, brother! Do not falter,
Though your heart be crushed and rent,
For, as there's power above us,
Truth will triumph in the end!
