DEMOCRATS AND THEIR TARIFF The democratic party has now gone on record with its tariff bill. It has placed before the country a measure that contains a general reduction in the tariff duties of 28-per cent over those established by the Republican measure.

In the main, the bill is regarded as neither a Republican nor a democratic measure for it still retains, to a large extent, the Republican principles of protection and does not cut down the duties enough to give the color of free trade that has been so long advocated by the party now in power.

Such a measure does not clearly represent either the views of the governmental party nor those of the organization now in the minority.

Party alignments counted for little in the vote on the tariff bill. The refusal of some of the democrats to stay with their party measure and the decided jump that some of them took when they saw that the new enactment was aimed at the industries of their own states is peculiarly interesting.

Though Underwood and Wilson managed, in the main, to hold the democratic forces to their caucus instructions, there were some who broke away from the iron clad agreement that had been made and took a stand firmly against the measure that had the official sanction of the nation's chief executive and the official head of the party in power.

A study of the way that the votes were cast on the final roll call is an interesting one. Oregon's senators remained staunch friends of the administration and voted solidly with the democrats in all of their maneuvering to get the bill through the upper house. On the final vote, Chamberlain and Lane were there in their places and spoke as the administration's mouthpieces when their names were called by the senate secretary.

In spite of the fact that Chamberlain had denounced the measure in a public statement as a direct blow at the western states and as a law that would effect the interests of the Pacific and leave unharmed the wealthier east, his vote was cast with the administration when the hour for the crucial test came and when the opportunity was presented for him to raise his voice against the provisions of a measure that has a tendency to injure and cripple those industries of the state that can thrive only with a certain protective tariff.

The people of Oregon are not enlightened as to why their senator chose to remain within the ranks of the caucus-bound democratic forces and to vote under the instructions of the party leaders for a measure that he had denounced as injurious to the west and had seen would bring upon his own state a business and financial depression because of the raising of the protection wall under which those industries had thrived.

When the senators return from the festive life of the national capital and again face the people of the state, they will have an explanation to make that will be interesting to read and that will mean much to their future political life in Oregon.

La Follette's decision to vote with the democrats on the measure comes with his statements that, while he does not believe in its principles nor approve of some of the rates that it contains, it is the best tariff that has yet been produced and excels the one that was passed by a Republican congress and fathered by Payne and Aldrich during the Taft administration.

It may be that La Follette can explain to his state why he chose to take that stand and the provision in the measure that have so impressed themselves

For the Nerves: Eat Slowly, Walk Slowly, Speak Slowly

By Dr. EDWIN ASH, Prominent Nerve Specialist of London

EAT SLOWLY, WALK SLOWLY, DRESS SLOWLY, SPEAK SLOWLY.

I don't mean that people should be dull and lazy, but that the first step in attaining efficiency is SELF CONTROL—of mind and body. Very rapid speech, hasty meals and nervous hurrying along the street were common examples of energy wasting habits, as are also indigestible and hurried lunches, too tight clothing, needless worrying about details of domestic, professional and business life.

Here are a few golden rules for the hurried in the conservation of energy:

Wear reasonably LOOSE CLOTHING. Spend at least one hour in the open air daily. Always get up at the same time. Practice SELF CONTROL IN THE LITTLE THINGS OF DAILY LIFE.

The type of mind which achieves most brilliant results is often associated with feverish energy, which frequently is followed by tremendous depression as the result of GOING TOO FAST.

You get very active brains often in men who are heavy when they wake in the mornings and are at their best at 10 o'clock at night, who are extremely sensitive to cold and wet weather, thriving best in warm climates, yet NEGLECT THEIR MEALS AND SLEEP.

MEN ALWAYS ON THE QUI VIVE ARE EASILY OVERWORKED. THE MOST INTELLIGENT ARE MOST APT TO BE NEUROTIC. IT IS THE EXTREMELY MOBILE MINDS WHICH CREATE PICTURES AND POETRY. IT IS THESE THAT MOST REQUIRE TO PRACTICE SELF CONTROL.

upon him as to cause him to desert the ranks of the opposition and to fall in line with the majority party.

The alignment on the measure is an interesting one when the names of the senators who have been in the limelight for the past several years are read as they voted on the new tariff measure. In the list are Borah, with progressive tendencies; Brady, a Republican of the old school; Cummins, a national figure in the third party campaign; Penrose, the Pennsylvania boss; Root of New York, the Tammany protegee; Smoot of Utah; Ransdell and Thornton of Louisiana.

Democrats, Progressives and old line Republicans lined against that tariff and yet so well was the machine organization that Wilson and his versatile lieutenants, Oscar Underwood and the senate caucus, put the bill through the upper house and succeeded in forcing the senate to pass a measure with which most of its members were dissatisfied and which many of them believed would end in their political burial when they again appeared before their people at the polls.

Upon that tariff measure, the democrats of the country will have to stand or fall. It is their first solution of a problem that has confronted the nation with consistent regularity for a number of years. The provisions of that bill will either make the democratic party at the polls or it will convince the people of their inability to handle successfully the great puzzles that confront a national administration and will reveal their failure to meet the situations in the administration of the country as they arise from time to time.

President Wilson has expressed his appreciation over the action of the senate in sending the bill to the conference committee and in hurrying it to the White House for executive approval. On that measure, to a larger extent than is probably now realized, will depend the national approval of the democratic policy and the confidence of the people in the administration's abilities to successfully carry its policies into effect in such a way as to benefit the country at large.

BRITISH SCIENTISTS TO MEET BIRMINGHAM, Eng., Sept. 10.—The British association for the advancement of science opened its annual meeting here today with more than 2000 scientists in attendance. Sir Oliver Lodge, the famous scientist and educator, inaugurated himself into the presidency and delivered the presidential address. Sir Oliver's address had been anticipated with keen interest ever since announcement was made that it would deal with the subject of the sequel to life.

In some quarters it had been fore-casted that the address would contain startling new evidence of survival after death and that Sir Oliver would insist on the continuity of life before and after death as essential to science. All predictions of this character proved erroneous. The famous scientist, who is probably the world's foremost leader in the field of physical research, presented no evidence in support of the theory of survival after death. The address was confined almost wholly to a discussion of the continuity of the physical universe and its laws.

A DEED AND A WORD. A little stream had lost its way Amid the grass and fern. A passing stranger scooped a well Where weary men might turn. He walled it in and hung with care A ladle at the brink. He thought not of the deed he did. But judged that all might drink. He passed again, and, lo, the well. By summer never dried. Had cooled ten thousand parching tongues And saved a life beside.

CHANGE THE SUBJECT. WHEN the troubles of life assail you And the morrow looks bitter and drear; When no prayers and no hope avail you, A path that is better and clear— Change the subject and take up another. You'll find this was the best. Count your fellow man as a brother And lay the old trouble to rest.

No trials of life were ever medded By worry and fret and care. New thoughts and new hopes have befriended A man in the depths of despair. Change the subject and barter your sorrow For a task that is newer and bright, And the dawn of the sun on the morrow Will clear the dark shadows of night.

No life was ever free from despairing; There are worries assailing us all. But the pains that are smarting and tearing— The heart will grow lesser and small. When the subject is changed for another You'll find this way is the best: Count your fellow man as a brother And lay the old trouble to rest. —Horace Seymour Keller.
