C. N. McARTHUR C. N. McArthur, a well known attorney of PORT- FOR CONGRESS land, and twice speaker of the Oregon House of Representatives, has announced his candidacy for congress to succeed the Honorable A. Walter Lafferty, of whom the people of Oregon have no especial reason to be proud. Lafferty is supposed to represent Oregon, but he was elected by the voters of Multnomah county, which is a congressional district in itself. The Enterprise has always been puzzled over the choice of Lafferty and hopes the people of Portland will displace him. Mr. McArthur has a good record in the Oregon legislature. He comes from a fine line of people. He is a graduate of the University of Oregon and a bright, progressive young man with a very wide circle of personal friends throughout the state.

CHILD TRAINING Recent examples of children whose home training AT HOME has been more or less neglected, have enforced the theories that educators have been pounding into the public ear for the past several years that education, like charity, begins at home. Of the criminals that annually cost fortunes to the cities and states of the country in prosecutions and court trials, the large percentage are reported from homes where the early training has been neglected or has been of the kind that does not tend to improve the standard of citizenship.

There is no more potent factor in the development of those higher ideals in the American citizenry than the influence of the home. Properly directed training develops in the embryo citizen those qualities that tend for greater civic and public usefulness and make of him the law abiding and law enforcing unit in the community rather than a member of that class, that, in later years, becomes a burden upon the general public and that entails numberless prosecutions and long drawn out trials through labyrinth of the courts in order that the public sense of justice may be satisfied and the man given in his mature and settled years that training as to the legal rights of others that should have been instilled into him by his parents during his years at home.

What is true of the boy and man is also as fully and emphatically true of the girl and woman. In most homes, the early educational training that every child should have is given to the girl and the boy is allowed the freedom that his sister does not have. Even in those families from which the criminal class so largely comes, the girls are taught more of the higher ideals than are the boys during that impressionable age when home training becomes such an important factor in the after life of the citizen of the community.

But a girl that does not have the advantages of this home training, who is allowed the freedom to exercise her own instincts and to realize her own ambitions, whose will is uncurbed and whose energies are misdirected or totally undirected becomes as much, if not more, of a factor in that criminal class that is afterwards a burden upon society and that must, in her later life, take upon itself the duty of curbing those instincts and directing that will that should have been earlier trained and put by the parents into those useful and proper channels that would have made of her a beneficial force in the development and improvement of the society of the community in which she lives.

Educators and criminologists all over this country and in foreign lands, where investigations of this kind have been in progress for many years have long ago come to this conclusion as a result of the deep and thorough investigations that they have made and the studies of those criminal classes that have come under their observation and attention.

But the public has heretofore been lulled to sleep by the belief that these men, in their studies and merely theorists, that the solutions which they have offered were not practical or effective, that they, as theorists, were not capable of effecting the cure for the disease that their examinations showed them exists in the body politic. So long has this and other notions regarded the investigator as a student and a theorist that his studies have been taken rather in the light of the impracticable and have been passed over lightly and disrespectfully by those who have not given the problem the same serious consideration nor the same thorough study and investigation.

The child who runs away from home consistently and persistently shows to the community and to those who watch his movements that his home training is not as it should be. The girl who, after she has yielded to her infatuation for some man and has disappeared with him, yet fears to return to her parents and her home in penitence, exhibits the fact more clearly than even the words of the learned theorists that she has not been properly cared for and trained in those impressionable years when the training would become a potent factor for the development of that sense of right and wrong that is a latent instinct in every member of the species.

It is not only a duty that develops upon the parent but it is a demand that society makes upon that parent for better and higher ideals in early home training. Society has an issue at stake. It means that the percentage of criminals will be reduced. It entails fewer prosecutions, less court trials, smaller prisons, jails, and penitentiaries. It means a reduction in the number of inmates of the penal institutions of each and every governmental unit. With it, is tied up the annual expenditures for prosecution for the maintenance of the prison and the prisoner. It means and entails a reduction and a minimization of crime.

In all of these things, society has an interest. It is a vital interest that is involved. It does not mean that the parent may train or neglect to train his child as he, in his parental wisdom elects, but society demands, and it enforces that demand with the threat of after punishment more keen and severe in its lasting effects than conviction for crime, that the parental influence be extended over that child during its plastic age to such an extent that the higher ideals of citizenry and civic duty are developed and the impressionable mind is brought to realize its duty to that society in which it lives and which gives it the other material benefits that it enjoys.

YOUTH.
WHAT do they know of youth who still are young?
They but the singers of a golden song,
Who may not guess its worth or wonder-thing
Like largess to the throng.
We only—young no longer, old no long—
Before its harmonies stand marveling—
Oh, we who listen; never they who sing!

NOT for itself is beauty, but for us
Who gaze upon it with all reverent eyes.
And youth, which sheds its glory luminous,
Gives ever in this wise.
Itself the joy it may not realize.
Only we know who linger overlong
Youth that is made of beauty and of song.

Women Will Marry For Love When Economically Independent

By Miss ESTHER DRESDEN, President of Chicago Young Women's Suffrage Alliance

MANY of our women in the wealthy middle classes live in a state of SEX PARASITISM, dependent on man and kept by him in luxury and comfort without doing an iota of mental or physical work. With the other classes marriage simply means MORE WORK.

WHEN WOMEN BECOME ECONOMICALLY INDEPENDENT THEY WILL MARRY ONLY FOR LOVE.

Under present conditions they enter the industrial field until they can procure a life job of domestic work via a husband.

Today, NO MATTER WHAT WORK WOMEN DO BEFORE THEIR MARRIAGE—whether they are trained nurses, stenographers or other skilled workers—upon marriage they are ALL REDUCED TO THE LOW LEVEL OF KITCHEN DRUDGES. HAPHAZARD METHODS IN USE IN THE HOME TODAY are detrimental both to the family and to the individual.
