records, so that visitors would have opportunity to observe the great variety of displays on hand. This proved to be a wise arrangement, for there was so much to see that there would have been time for no special features. Not only were there all the usual features to be found at county fairs, but there were novelties distinctly worth while.

Among such may be mentioned the peanut plants grown to maturity by children of the Canby school district, the beautifully decorated booth of Warner grange, with its representative display of fruits, grains and vegetables; the handicraft of the school children in the various communities throughout the county, grouped on the second floor of the main pavilion in a monster juvenile fair; the striking automobile display of the Miller-Parker company of Oregon City, a unique showing well arranged; the plates of black and golden-brown corn, perfect in form and graining and odd only in color; black potatoes, which though not tempting in appearance have their uses, and a host of other Clackamas county wonders.

Flag Decorations
Rising above the exhibits on every hand and acting as a pleasing background to the array of agricultural products, were the decorations of flags, bunting and shields. The shields, many of which bore animal heads, bore in golden letters the legend, "Welcome to Clackamas County," and were typical of the spirit of the fair. Many of the booths were draped with crepe paper, curtains or sheaves of grain in combinations that made an especial appeal to the eyes of those who were artistically inclined. In fact the decorations were "worth the price of admission alone," as some of the visitors said.

Library Has Display.
One display that attracted much attention was that of the Oregon Library commission, which is endeavoring to arouse interest in the rural districts in circulating libraries which will be sent out from various county centers. The plan being boosted at the Canby fair will add but a fraction of a mill to the general tax, and will place within reach of even the most isolated farmer the best reading of the world today and the best writings of the classical authors.

Poultry Exhibit.
In three or four pavilions to the east of the race track, where daily speed contests are held, are the displays of poultry and livestock. These attracted everybody who visited the fair. Some folk paid more attention to the horses that filled two of the barns, while others seemed to find more that was worth seeing in the displays of blooded dairy and farm stock. There is on view, however, enough for all. Pigeons just able to waddle about and hogs that will tip the scales at half a ton, with all the grades of swine in between, make a big part of the display; sheep that bear the kind of wool that has made Oregon famous add their quota to the showing, and in other sheds and barns are to be found Shetland ponies that delight the children, cows that have records for milk production, horses that have made their mark on the track, and draft animals that are the farmer's best help in forcing the fields to yield him his income.

Side Shows.
Then there are the side shows and concessions. No fair is complete without these, and the Clackamas County fair has its pick of the best. In one tent Scheherazade ben-Olem holds forth, and will reveal the future for ten cents, or truthfully reveal the past for two-bits. Near her augury is a moving picture show that shows the last of the wild, wild west—as it is imagined in the "movie" studios of Bayonne, New Jersey. Not so far away is "The Strangest Girl Alive," who is probably worth the price of admission; while in another candy-battered tent is a mysterious collection of animals that are said to be "real and alive," and that make strange, tinny roars every time a small boy disappears under the flooring and "stirs them up."

Then there is the beautiful Matilda who permits impressionable youths to try and drop rings over various articles of value so arranged that they cannot be "inged," and nearby her husband with a wheel-of-fortune. All these are there, and a merry-go-round and other things; including a man who makes candy in the open air without getting yellow jackets caught in the sticky mess while it is being "pulled."

Biggest Yet.
In short the Clackamas county fair is all there, and will be for the remainder of the week. Thursday is "Oregon City day," and an excursion will be run from the county seat. There will be special features for the day; and an exceptional racing card has been arranged. Also the judging of stock will start, and blue ribbons will blossom out on the winners. The fair will continue Friday and Saturday, with something different doing on each of the days.

UNIONISTS PREPARE FOR REVOLUTION IN IRELAND

BELFAST, Sept. 24.—The embryo "Parliament of Ulster," at present known as the Ulster Unionist Council, assembled here today in Ulster Hall to discuss plans for provisional government in the event the home rule bill becomes law. Six hundred delegates were present. The Marquis of Londonderry, former Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, was chairman.

Sir Edward Carson, leader of the Ulster Unionists, all the Irish Unionist members of the house of commons, the Duke of Abercorn and many other Peers and representatives from all parts of the province of Ulster attended.

Full details of the provisional constitution of the province were communicated to the meeting for formal ratification. The earnestness with which the participants regarded the procedure was exemplified in reports of the meeting, which declared: "This nucleus of an Ulster Parliament will put its hands to a document no less remarkable than the Declaration of Independence and as pregnant with possibilities of change in the political history of the country."
