depended upon for production of cereal crops, there have been more than the ing him a good chance for success in the region served by the gulf ports, it usual number of pessimistic prophecies of calamity impending to the human will be possible to divert him there from New York, but not otherwise. race from shortage of food. Pessimists of this sort are wont to say that we have about reached the limit of grain cultivation, and that the population is increasing so rapidly that the problem of feeding it will be acute in a few generations. It is acute already, so far as the high cost of living is concerned, but that is not because of having reached the limit of the world's productiveness. The usual answer to this prophecy of impending starvation is that science will find a way. It is predicted that science will in time take the lifegiving elements from earth and air and transmute them into food direct, without putting them through the chemistry of grain growing, beef raising, egg producing and milk secreting. Wonderful achievements of science in finding substitutes for exhausted natural resources are pointed to as proof of the reasonableness of this expectation.

Statistics do not show any need to place our reliance for food for the enhanced millions of the earth in future centuries upon any necromancy of science. From a productive standpoint it can be said that we have but begun to scratch the earth's surface in the matter of food production. There are approximately 2,000,000,000 acres of land under cultivation, of the 30,000,-000,000 of the total land area of the earth. Making due allowance for uncultivable deserts and mountains there are at least 15,000,000,000 of acres of cultivable land still unproductive or five times as much as is now producing, This alone would seem to be sufficient for five times our present population, a state of things not likely to be reached for many centuries. Here, in the United States it is an admitted fact that on the average we are not getting from our cultivation more than one-third the food value we should per acre. This is less true in some parts of Europe, but more true in Asia, Africa and South America, so much that so that it might be safe to say that, taken as a whole, the 2,000,000,000 acres now under cultivation are producing but a the best players in the world. His requarter of what they might, and at some future time will produce. This fact would permit another multiplication of the world's population by four before starvation became acute.

Clearly scientific discovery is not to be our last resort for a long time to come, though our ever-present help in the matter of better agriculture and economy of use of what we produce. Our first problem in the matter of increasing the food supply is to get better farming done right here in this country and in this state. Development of unused areas will come gradually as civilization advances, but we shall have to stir ourselves fo rour own improvement. Oregon, for example, could send to market twice as much food products as she now does, with no addition but better methods to her equipment. That is the practical problem of the food supply as it affects the pres-

SEEKING While watching a stream of immigrants land at Ellis Island, IMMIGRANTS Senator Randall and a number of other Southerners organized tentatively the Mississippi Valley Immigration Association, with the purpose of dverting some of the immigrants now landing a the rate of 1000 to 2000 a day at New York to New Orleans and other gulf ports. The object is a good one, and the association is just what is needed, if it is made to represent the entire Missssippi Valley in its membership, and not merely a few individuals. If the people of the lower Miesissipp states will get behind such an association and give it actual life and vigor, it might do a great work for those states in developing their agricultural resources and supplying needed

There is much more needed to divert immigrants from the New York gateway to those on the gulf coast than mere invitation or actual provision his nerve and his knowledge of the of steamer lines for their passage. Immigrants now enter the port of New York almost exclusively. Some enter at Boston, some at Philadelphia and a few at other ports, but the great bulk land at Ellis Island. There are three reasons for this. In the first place, most immigrants remain the northern tier of states, and New York is the most convenient port of entry for that sec-

TF I were the devil, certainly I would not enjoy anything so much as a walk up Broadway or Fifth avenue, New York, looking at the slit skirts and other new styles of women's dress.

Until very recently I never knew a woman who was not interested in jewels and clothes. But now they have lost their interest in clothing and are going around the streets with as few clothes as possible and making those few as short and transparent as possible.

THESE THINGS LEAD ONLY TO THE DEVIL. THEY TEMPT MEN, AND NO WOMAN EVER FELL WITHOUT THE AID OF A MAN

There are a lot of good men, just as good as you can show me, who get drunk. What you Christians ought to do is to go to them and sit up with them and pray with them. Then they would quit drinking.

In the third place, those who have no settled plans can always find a colony of their own countrymen in New York, among whom they may live for a time while learning to speak English, and from whom they may also learn the best way to begin making a living. Also it is a fact that this section has more to offer immigrants in the matter of agricultural opportunities than that farther north or anywhere around New York. While this $3.00 is a fact, it is also true that the practical machinery for getting the immigrants rour months by mail ______ 1.00 ciaton will not supply it, if it gives its sole attention to efforts to induce immi-ation facilities for so doing. MAKING OF A CHAMPION.

Maurice E. McLoughlin of California, young man, is the lawn tennis champion of the United States and one of cent playing has aroused the players and followers of the game, many thousands in number, to enthusiasm.

Winning the championship after three months of the hardest lawn tennis that an American ever attempted. McLoughlin proved that his condition was perfect, that he could have undergone greater stress if need were. The reason?

It is found in the statement of a sporting writer that the powers of endurance fought and won for McLoughlin. He "stood up" under the strain. When the time came for the supreme effort he had the stamina to meet the call upon him

If he had been content with the brilliance of play which is naturally his. if he had relied upon his service and his stroke, his power of outguessing the other fellow, McLoughlin in all probability would not have won the championship The long strain of the campaigns in England and America would have told, and at the end he would have gone to pieces. It is stamina that tells in lawn tennis, in baseball, in football, in all the affairs of life

When athletes wish to praise a man highly they say he "has the stuff in him." That means he is fit for a long siege if necessary. It means that he does not rely altogether on his brains. game.

It means that he can last, Stamina, "the stuff," does not come to a man naturally. It must be developed. It must be acquired by degrees, It cannot be gained in an hour, a day

In a sense men and women are all engaged in a sort of championship game The prizes go most often to those who train faithfully and patiently and wait their time.

True, sometimes the man or woman of genius arises who needs no training. It is the exceptional case. Most of us are not geniuses

The rest of us, in whatever walk of life we find ourselves or in whatever fields we pursue our ends and ideals. need the sort of stamina that is developed by long preparation, by careful training, by observance of the rules of physical, mental and moral health. The wisest and most successful athlete is the one who knows the rules and follows them closely. The winnerin the game of life likewise follows the They are not numerous. They are simple and easily learned. But they must be observed if succes

He collected seventeen of these unfortunates. but could not find the eighteenth. A suspect was passing by, and the agent asked his name. The prisoner declined to give it, and the agent at once handed him over to the gendarmes. Next day the man was guillotined. Another day an agent summoned a prisoner of fifty, but the mpn did not answer to his name, and a lad of seventeen who was playing at ball was seized, taken to the conciergerie and put to death.

or a cigarette, but a betel nut. There every one carries a supply of nuts in a neat little ivory box, not unlike the snuffboxes of our ancestors. The betel nut is a narcotic, in its effects not unlike tobacco, but it is much more harmful. Those who chew it suffer from inflamed gums, and they generally lose their teeth. The betel is a species of climbing plant, with a leaf not unlike lvy. It yields a crop of nuts, which are ground to a powder. This is mixed with a similar powder derived from the areca nut and made into a paste, which is wrapped in pieces of betel
