Wagner's Second Marriage.

The Parts Weekly Revue relates from letters bitherto unpublished the exciting story of Wagner's second marriage. All the world knows that he married, after the necessary divorce, the wife of Hans von Bulow, but all the world does not know that there was a rival applicant for his heart and hand. This was Malwine Schnorr, the singer who had just created the part of Isolde in his "Tristan," and the cause of Malwine Schnorr was champloned by another artiste named Isidore de Renter, who announced herself as a propoetess, charged with a divine message to the musician. The message was to the effect that Wagner must marry Malwine and must at the same time persuade the king of Bavaria to marry Isidore herself. Wagner tells the story of his embarrassriage.
