Every one that uses roads should be interested in having good roads. How can they be made? Shall we continue to make them by the primitive methods used by our forefathers, or shall we adopt modern methods?

Obsolete, impractical, inefficient and most expensive methods are in most places in use. Roadmaking in general has not kept pace with most other industries in the use of practical and efficient labor saving devices. The old way of working roads on a day too wet to plow corn or harvest, putting a few slusherfuls of earth in the middle of the road in heaps like a diminutive mountain range and leaving them to he leveled by the elèments of nature and use, should be abandoned. Earth roads are the most delightful of all roads when well graded and free from dust. All well graded roads can be wonderfully improved and the upkeep lessened one-half by covering the top with a coating of about two inches of sharp sand and clay in which may be mixed half crushed stone that will go through a one inch mesh. If sand and clay are used, mix in the proportion of 80 per cent of sand and 20 per cent of clay. If crushed stone is used. mix it half and half with the sand and clay mixture. This coating should be spread on and harrowed and rolled until it is thoroughly mixed and packed so as to fill all the voids, and then it will shed the water like a roof and a good road.
