THERE IS no doubt that the weather bureau renders valuable service to the country, and especially to shipping by its attempts at forecasting the weather, but its failures are not infrequently more striking than its achievements. During the past month or six weeks "fat weather" has been mostly restricted to the predictions of the bureau. It is more or less exasperating to read in one's newspapers on or the postal card sent out by the weather people that the weather is "fair with light winds," when it is raining in torrents and the wind is tearing furiously through the streets. Of course, the fact is to be realized that meteorology is young as a science. At the same time local conditions may, and frequently do, set at naught seemingly reasonable forecasts based on widespread cyclonic movements. But when all allowances has been made, it is not easy to understand why the weather bureau should so strikingly have failed to give warning of the terrific storm which overwhelmed Cleveland a week ago and lashed the great lakes into fury for days after. An adequate appreciation by the workers in the bureau at Washington of what was known to be moving eastward from the Rocky Mountains would unquestionably have saved many lives and much shipping. It does not appear that the masters of lake vessels had any more impressive warning than the formal and familiar announcement of "generally fair; colder, brisk to high winds." The brisk winds proved to be a hurricane, but either the weather men were careless or they knew no more about it than other people.

WHETHER IT BE IN New York, Chicago, or Portland, police officials who are constantly thrown in contact with the underworld and meet daily in their routine work all of the criminal elements of a large city tend toward corruption and only periodical investigations ever seem to have an effect toward the cleaning up of administrations.

The evidence that has been produced in the Portland police scandal ranges from little games in the back room of the police station to the actual acceptance of money for services rendered. Whether this is true or not, may never be shown unless the Multnomah county grand jury returns indictments and the matters get into the courts.

There is a very evident scheme in the testimony that has been produced thus far. The police officers are making one or two men in the service "the goats" for the rest and are trying to clean their own skirts by shifting the responsibility to the rest. The whole thing is a dirty political mess from start to finish. If the police forces of our cities cannot be kept straight and if

There Never Was a Time That the Stage Was Better Than It Is Today

By BRANDER MATTHEWS, Academic Critic and Student of the Drama

JUST at present we hear some talk about the DECADENCE OF THE DRAMA, some opinion expressed that the drama is as bad as it can be. But these views are voiced, I think, largely by those who FAIL TO CONSIDER THE STAGE AS A WHOLE and really fix their attention on one or two plays unwisely exploited.

THERE CAN BE NO QUESTION THAT THE STAGE TODAY IS FAR BETTER THAN AT ANY PREVIOUS PERIOD, CERTAINLY OF THE UNITED STATES.

Fifty years ago the drama of the English language was simply contemptible. There was at that time a sharp division between literature and the drama. So bad were conditions then that respectable people were DRIVEN AWAY FROM THE THEATER except when they went to see a great actor—Booth, Kean, Cushman, for example. In those days respectable and discriminating people never went to the theater to see pictures of contemporary life, for such pictures were not to be found on the stage. For pictures true to contemporary life people read novels.

What is particularly hopeful about the playwrights of today is that they are not trying to be literary. They are TRYING TO BE INTERESTING, and most of them are trying to be TRUTHFUL. By "literary truth" I do not mean portrayal of the external facts of life, but fidelity to the inner life, and it is this inner life that the younger men are trying to get. Personally I think the drama will be MORE IMPORTANT THAN PROSE FICTION during the next twenty-five years.

the city administrations can not be purified without these periodical investigations, there is something radically wrong with our system, and, very evidently, something radically wrong with our police personnel and methods.

From the testimony that has come out through the course of several police scandals over the country, there are few law-abiding officers on our big city forces. About the time that a man gets located on a police force, he proceeds to fall into the general rut of taking things easily and making money as readily and with as little effort as he can, whether it comes honestly or not.

These things are called to our attention by several scandals that have been reported through the country in the past few years. Even civil service has, apparently, little effect in placing the men on the same footing that the law requires other citizens to maintain. Constant association with criminals seem to make even the police force criminal and negligent in its administration of justice.

There is evidence in the Portland case to show that the police even persecuted certain members of the underworld because they refused to swear falsely on the stand and did not obey the injunctions that were issued by the heads of the department through the rank and file of the force.

It does seem as though some method could be devised in our large cities by which the officers could be protected from the temptation to graft and the public preserved from persecution at the hands of those who are authorized to enforce the law. Gambling policemen, law evading officers of the law are not wanted on any police force and the sooner that they are discharged, the better and cleaner will be the city administration.

CAPTAIN KETCHAM of the Yale football team indignantly declares that the Yale players will not be numbered for the accommodation of spectators and newspaper writers, and adds for the edification of all whom it may concern that the game is not for the newspapers or for the public, but for the colleges. Captain Ketcham should back up. He has got his signals mixed. How long does he suppose the colleges would be able to support the game on its present expensive scale if the substantial interest of the public were eliminated? And how would public interest in the sport be fostered and stimulated if not by the newspapers? If football is played for the colleges alone, how does Captain Ketcham explain the frequency with which games are played outside of college grounds? The public includes a very considerable number of college alumni—many of them Yale alumni. The same may be said of the newspaper profession. Would Captain Ketcham ignore this element of press and public, along with the rest. If his theory were correct, the Yale football treasury in two years would be as lean as a starved weasel.

Heart to Heart Talks

By CHARLES N. LURIE. CHEER UP! From many sides come witnesses to assure us that if we would prosper mentally, physically and materially we must cheer up. Nothing is gained by grumpiness, say our official and unofficial advisers.

First, we have the testimony of a Philadelphia lady that if we desire to live long we must guard against low spirits. "Be happy if you wish to reach a good old age," says this woman. She ought to know, for she has been a resident of this world (formerly miscalled a "vale of tears") for 105 years.

So, you see, if you want to live long you must be cheerful. Then we have the testimony of certain physicians of Johns Hopkins University Medical school, one of the highest in America, that good cheer and a smile are preventives of threatened appendicitis and other intestinal disorders.

In other words, if you are cheerful enough you may "jolly" your vermiform appendix into thinking there is nothing the matter with it. To those who insist on going through life with grouches the doctor says: "Worry and you'll get a pain in the side."

You see, don't you, that if you want to be healthy you simply have to be cheerful? Moreover, every one knows that business success depends in a great measure on a smiling exterior. Even the inanimate place of business, the store or shop which presents a smiling exterior, is more likely to be successful than the one with a forbidding appearance. Here's a human instance: A successful seller of bonds for one of the big city houses returned to headquarters recently and reported that he had been unable to do any business because he had felt "blue." "When you feel cheerful you get orders," he said. If you are not convinced now that you must be cheerful you are a hopeless case. Everything and everybody tells you so. so you must believe it. How about the things that tend to take away your cheerfulness? you ask. There are no such things. "Forget them!" as the slang phrase has it. Or, if you are of a literary mind and prefer a translation from the foreign language, listen to this from the German: "Schwamm darueber!" That means "Wipe it out!" (Literally it means "Sponge over it!")

SELF RELIANCE. Humility is the part of wisdom and is most becoming in men. But let no one discourage self reliance. It is, of all, the greatest quality of true manliness.—Louis Kossuth.
