RACTICAL THINGS in education are the favorites nowadays in al educational circles. The address of Frank Welles of the office of the state superintendent before the teachers of Clackamas county last week emphasized this feature of the work of the country schools. He declared that the trend of the times is toward the simplification of the courses of study in all of the schools and the abolition of all of those things that are useless to Professor I. E. Calavan, county superintendent, has also that positive idea in the administration of the public school system of the county. He thinks that the schools of the county should be used to train the child for after life -not to stuff his head full of things for which he will never have the slight-

Under the old system of education, the faculties of the schools filled their courses with things and studies that the average child never had the slightest use for in his after life and that merely served to crowd out of his mind some of the other things that might have proved of real benefit to him. There has been, in the past, too much of that sort of work. The courses have been too full of useless, trivial things. They have crowded out the real aims and pur poses of education—the preparation of the child for after life.

The leaders of education have come to the point where they now realize all of this and the past few years have worked a tremendous revolution along this line. Now all of the county superintendents who are keeping apace with the trend of the times are inducing their various boards to cut out all of the useless work and teach those practical courses that give to the child some vital facts that will beneficially prepare him for his after career.

The school is the training camp for the young player on the diamond of life. The boy with the mechanical turn of mind should be given those op- cattle were offered than choice. Cow portunities that will give him the fundamentals of his chosen work. From the schools often come some of the country's greatest inventors or mechan- for some time, selling from $4,50 to township 3 south, range 2 east; $1.

Early in his school life, the trend of the child's mind is shown by the studies in which he excels. He should then be given a specialized course in those elements of that study that will be of benefit to him when he becomes a man and that will prove useful when he goes into the business or professional world.

The problem of making the courses of study practical has grown finer the open market and top quality still even than this. The county superintendent, for instance, believes in cutting from those practical courses in the schools all that is useless and trivial and teaching to the students only those parts of the studies that will be of real value later after they have finished their education and the training that they have received in school beings to be used.

Mathematics, for an example, is an essential in education. But there are features of the courses in that study for which the child has not the slightest use in later life and that merely take his time and crowd his mind when he ought to be devoting his energies in other ways. What good does the knowledge of cube root do a child who may become a lawyer? What benefit does he gain from one-third of the matter that is nowadays crowded into the text books or that was thrown in there only a few years ago? The essential thing in mathematics is the knowledge of addition and substraction. From that basis, all of the problems of the average man or woman are worked. A thorough knowledge of that subject is an essential in all courses that are devised for schools because upon it hinges most of the business dealings in later

Much of the Blindness In the World Can and Should Be Ended Forever

By HELEN KELLER, Remarkable Blind and Deaf Mute

WAS blind; now I see. I was deaf; now I hear. I was dumb; now I speak. The hands of others wrought this miracle in me.

I am glad to think of what the blind can do, because their brave accomplishments prove, absolutely prove, what people with five senses can do.

They show what good servants the brain and the senses can be when they WORK TOGETHER. You who see raise your eyes and behold the sun and moon, the earth, the ocean and the faces of men.

We who are blind stretch out our hands and know all the softness of growing things, all the sweet ways of children, all the endearments of human affection. But the senses alone are not enough. It is only when they are united with IMAGINATION AND THOUGHT and feeling that they acquire their full value.

THOSE WHO ARE BLIND KNOW HOW TO BE BLIND, THEY MUST ALSO LEARN HOW TO WORK TOGETHER WITH THE SEE-ING SO THAT EVERY BLIND CHILD MAY BE TAUGHT, EVERY BLIND MAN AND WOMAN HELPED. WE CAN. WE MUST UNITE SO THAT MUCH OF THE BLINDNESS IN THE WORLD SHALL BE ENDED FOREVER.

And yet, it is a fact that a large proportion of those students who pass through the educational mill have not a working knowledge of the subject and cannot figure for themselves any of the daily problems with which they are confronted in the ordinary course of business. Of what use, then, is all E. E. BRODIE - - - - - Editor and Publisher of this other matter that their heads have been crowded with during their school life and that has driven out the very essentials that the school is ex-

> "Reading, 'riting, and 'rithmetic" are still the essentials of education, though some of our text books seem to have forgotten that idea long ago and to have tried to crowd into their pages all of the foreign matter that could $3.00 possibly be placed there.

The same principle applies to English. No man is an educator today in the true sense of the word whose works are filled with words that stretch across half a line of type. Simplicity of words, concentration of thought in the shortest possible space and sentences, is now the keynote of a true education. The man whose habits call for large words is nowadays a freak. The best and most prominent leaders in thought no longer use extensive phrases if they can be avoided and the best writers of all times have won their hold upon literature because of the strength of sentence and simplicity of expres-

This is the principle of the reform in educational circles all over the country and particularly in Clackamas county. It is the keynote to Superintendent Calavan's administration. Practical things in education mean a useful education that trains the boy or girl for later life,

Heart to Heart Talks

"BOARDED UP."

In the hot weather in the city, when the houses cast no refreshing shadows such as lie under the trees and along the fence rows in the country, there are two melancholy sights.

One of them is to be seen in the slums. There men and women and little children sweat and pant and live their lives among sights and sounds and odors which defile the air and make it pestilential.

The other lies "uptown," where the wealthy folks live-when they are in town. Now they are summering by seashore or lakeside or in the cool, breezy mountains. Their houses stand tenantless, with doors and windows boarded up.

You may walk along row after row of houses of the wealthy without finding one open.

In the slums the gutters swarm. In the rich districts you may walk squares without seeing any one save an occasional watchman or caretaker. The quarters of the wealthy are almost as deserted as the ruins of Babylon. At night one might almost hear the yelping of the jackal that make W. E. Simpson to Ida E. Simpson, the silence more pronounced in the wreck that was Nineveh. Too often do the rich board up themselves as well as their houses. Between them and their brothers, the poor, is a wall of gold that shuts out human sympathy. They are "boarded up."

They hoard their treasures of wealth and art as in summer they close up their mansions. In winter the houses are occupied for a brief time between flittings to winter resorts. Most of the year the town houses are closed.

So it is with their sympathies. They close them up as they do their houses. Every city, every town and villa has Its dividing line between its rich district and its poor quarter. Beyond it the poor may not pass and the rich do not care to travel.

They board themselves up. Not all, of course. Some there be who keep open all the year round the houses of their love and brotherliness, who do not inclose themselves within their own four walls and forget the world without. Of such are the true philanthropists "lovers of man," who work in hot weather and in cold for the advance ment of their fellow men. They are invested with the sense of the brotherhood of man, and they garb themselves in the robes of charity and forget the rich raiment to which, in virtue of their worldly wealth, they are en-
