

That Tired Feeling

Is a Common Spring Trouble. It's a sign that the blood is deficient in vitality, just as pimples and other eruptions are signs that the blood is impure.

Hood's Sarsaparilla and Pills

Remove it, give new life, new courage, strength and animation. They cleanse the blood and clear the complexion. Accept no substitute. "I felt tired all the time and could not sleep. After taking Hood's Sarsaparilla a while I could sleep well and the tired feeling had gone. This great medicine has also cured me of scrofula." Mrs. C. M. Root, Gilard, Conn.

Hood's Sarsaparilla promises to cure and keeps the promise.

Beautiful Marks of Maple. Nobody seems to know what cause it is which produces those delicate and beautiful lines in maple, known as bird's-eye. Some people think they come from the hundreds of little branches which shoot out over the trunk of the tree as soon as a clearing is made around it. Expert timbermen say that is not the case. The only way to tell a bird's-eye maple tree is to cut it. There are no outward signs by which one can judge. The Railroad Gazette tells a story of the late George M. Pullman. Many years ago he was offered a mahogany log for $3,000, to be cut into veneers. It was supposed to be a very fine piece of wood, but this could only be determined by cutting it. He declined the offer, but agreed to take the log cut into veneers for what it was worth. The owner had it sawed and was paid $7,000 for his veneers. Any one who can discover the secret of determining the interior nature of wood from the outside will have a fortune.

No Bath, No Wife. Among the Turks bath money forms an item in every marriage contract, the husband engaging to allow his wife a certain sum for bathing purposes. Should it be withheld she has only to go before the cad and turn her slipper upside down, and if the complaint be not then redressed it is ground for a divorce.

An Expert Opinion. "Yes; he started a matrimonial agency and expected to make a lot of money." "Why didn't he?" "He married his typewriter girl inside of a week, and she wouldn't let him go on with the business because it was too dangerous."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Taking No Chances. "Some one was telling me that parlor matches aren't legal any more," said Marmaduke. "Let's go into the sitting room," said Alice, hastily leading the way.—New York Sun.

BOBCH WORK OF NATURE AS SHOWN IN THE PHYSICAL MAKE-UP OF MAN.

JUST now, when most of mankind is ready to believe that perfection has been reached in physical humanity, along comes a Belgian professor to take the conceit out of us and prove that even a self-made man has a score of flaws in his make-up. We are, to begin with, provided with eight surplus teeth. If we had eight less we could chew our beefsteak and gum just as well and the chances of toothache would be largely reduced. Then there are four fingers where but three are required to count our cash, button our collars or use the bucksaw and ax. It is the same with the toes. The third one could have been left off the foot without the slightest detriment to man or woman, and the saving in corn-cures would have been a pretty penny by this date.

Nature made whiskers to grow on the faces of at least three-fourths of the male population of the world. The Belgian professor defies any one of us to show where whiskers beautify or benefit, while he can name no less than a dozen evils arising from them. We have more ribs than needed by two. He proves this by counting the hoops on a barrel. As a rule, all human noses are made on too large a scale, and the consequence is that a cold in the head takes hold of a person with extra severity.

The ear of a whale, the professor says, is relatively only half the size of that of a man, while his bulk is more than a hundred times greater. It was suspected that most men had too much cheek, but now we know that all men have too much ear.

As the monkey has no use for a forehead why should it have been given to man? Had the extra space been added to his neck every man could have worn a collar a foot high without sawing his chin. It is further asserted by the professor, says the Detroit Free Press, that nineteen out of twenty people squint and that ninety-nine out of every hundred have off-colored eyes. One eye in the center of the forehead would have answered all demands and been a decided blue or black. The professor has taken the statues of Venus, Apollo, Hercules and other famous models and with a two-foot rule and a bit of chalk has figured out that each has a score of imperfections. We are none of us all right—not even the professor himself—and we can't expect to be for at least 500 years to come. By that time Dame Nature will have served her apprenticeship and man will be created an scientific lines and with due reference to art and convenience.

OLDEST METHODIST CHURCH.

Edifice Built Early in the Eighteenth Century Still Stands. By raising an endowment that will be used to prevent St. George's Church, Philadelphia, from falling to decay, wealthy members of the Methodist Church in that city have made possible the preservation of a structure around which are clustered memories dear to the heart of every student of the early history of Methodism in America. St. George's Church is noted as the oldest Methodist Church in continuous use for worship in the world. Owing to its great age, the edifice would soon crumble away were it not for the steps about to be taken for its renovation. Especial attention will be paid to the old conference room, where still stands the desk at which sat Francis Asbury, the first Methodist bishop ordained in America, and on which is the original Bible used by him during his term as pastor of the church. Among the relics which are carefully preserved in a fireproof vault in this room are some of the quaint iron candlesticks that lighted the conferees at the first Methodist conference, held in 1773, a stove that was used for fires of wood, and the original collection bag of the church, a crude pocket of faded black velvet, tacked on a short iron handle.

The history of the church is a most interesting one. Captain Thomas Webb, an officer in the British army and a convert of John Wesley, first preached Methodism in Philadelphia. When he came to the city he held meetings in various odd places, as often as not in the open air. A strange chance gave him for his cathedral the old church. Members of the Dutch Reformed Church began the building of the structure, but could not raise the money to finish it, and were imprisoned for debt. The church was sold at auction to satisfy creditors, and was bid in for a considerable sum by the half-witted son of a wealthy citizen. Rather than bring shame upon the family name the father paid for his son's purchase, and immediately offered it for sale at a fraction of its cost. A member of the Methodist society purchased the church, and the first sermon was preached in the edifice amid great rejoicing by the Methodists.

Although very commonplace in comparison with religious structures of the present day, at the time it was built it was one of the show buildings of the continent. For half a century it remained the largest Methodist church in the world. In 1777 evil times came to Philadelphia. The British army occupied the city and St. George's Church was used first as a hospital and afterward as a riding school for the cavalry. It was a cheerless structure at that time. The building was not plastered till 1784, and was fitted with galleries about 1790.

PERSIAN ETIQUETTE.

How to Act When Making an Afternoon Call in the Morning. In Persia the slightest transgression of the rigid rules of etiquette is deemed rather worse than a crime. It is the proper thing in that country to make an afternoon call in the morning; the earlier, the better. A writer in Leisure Hour tells of one occasion when he suggested calling in the afternoon of a certain day. The Persian gentleman on whom he was to call cordially assented, and said he should expect him at seven in the morning. Persian houses are, as a rule, very simply furnished. There are neither tables nor chairs, but only cushions placed on the carpeted floor all round the room. Possibly your host, out of consideration for a European's inability to make himself comfortable on the floor, has provided one solitary high-backed chair for you to sit on. He conducts you to it, and bowing, invites you to be seated in most courteous phraseology and with graceful waving of the hands. Etiquette, however, forbids you to seat yourself before he does, and it also forbids the host to sit down before his guest is seated. Hence each politely declines to sit down before the other, and a contest of courtesy ensues, which ends at last in both host and guest seating themselves at the same moment, the guest on his host's right hand.

But how about the solitary chair? Your instinct suggests that, as your host has taken the trouble to provide it for you, the most courteous thing is to take it. But it would be a great mistake for you to do so. Etiquette forbids you to sit on a seat higher than that of your host. The most polite thing for you to do, therefore, is to thank him for his kindness, but to say that under no circumstances could you think of sitting on a seat elevated above his own.

You at last succeed in sitting down on the cushions by his side, and the servants, at a sign from your host, remove the chair. If you were to sit on it, they would comment most harshly on your arrogance.

Returned Arctic Explorer—Heavens no, miss! we had plenty of pemmican and walrus meat.—Chicago Tribune.

When you and your host are at length seated you bow to one another and once more ask after one another's health, although a few minutes ago the same tender inquiries were made when you first entered the room.

Your host has doubtless invited a large number of persons to meet you. You are not introduced to those present unless they are persons of importance, but you must, on ending your inquiries as to your host's health, bow to every one all round the room in turn, beginning on your right.

When the "afternoon call" has drawn to an end and the visitor rises to depart, he probably finds that his legs refuse to perform their duty for a few minutes, as he has been sitting cross-legged, an attitude dear to the Oriental, but by no means comfortable for a European. The host escorts the visitor to the door, and he rides away amid the low bows of a number of servants.

Lizards in Samoa. A resident of Samoa writes in an entertaining way of the lizards—little fellows about two inches long, prettily colored in a light and a dark shade of brown. They can run up a window pane quite as easily as can the flies on which they feed.

When alarmed, the lizards are off like a flash of light, and will take the most reckless leaps. I have seen them land safe at the end of a twenty foot jump. Yet when cornered they have no hesitation in snapping off the most of their tails.

That was a maddening puzzle to my small cat. The sight of a mo' anywhere was an immediate challenge to the kitten. She would immediately start on the hunt, for the most part a fruitless chase, for the little lizard could skulk off faster than two cats could pursue. Yet when the kitten did succeed in landing on the lizard there followed a scene of bewilderment. The mo' invariably snapped off its tail, which was left wriggling in one part of the veranda, while the lizard ran off a short distance and awaited developments.

The kitten never knew whether to catch the lizard or the tail. If the mo' moved, the kitten went for it; but she always stopped short to keep an eye on the wriggles of the tail. As soon as she turned back to take care of the tail, the mo' got in motion and had to be looked after. Hundreds of times I have watched the dilemma, and the ending was always the same—the lizard got away and the kitten had to be content with the bony tail. But there were lots of lizards about my house, sporting new tails.

CHANGE OF LIFE.

Some sensible advice to women passing through this trying period.

The painful and annoying symptoms experienced by most women at this period of life are easily overcome by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It is especially designed to meet the needs of woman's system at the trying time of change of life.

It is no exaggeration to state that Mrs. Pinkham has over 5000 letters like the following proving the great value of her medicine at such times.

"I wish to thank Mrs. Pinkham for what her medicine has done for me. My trouble was change of life. Four years ago my health began to fail, my head began to grow dizzy, my eyes pained me, and at times it seemed as if my back would fall, had terrible pains across the kidneys. Hot flashes were very frequent and trying. A friend advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I have taken six bottles of it and am to-day free from those troubles. I cannot speak in high enough terms of the medicine. I recommend it to all and wish every suffering woman would give it a trial."—Bella Ross, 88 Montclair Ave., Rosindale, Mass.—$5.00 per bottle if original of above letter proving genuineness cannot be produced.

Lengthening the Joy.

Dot—Is that all the pie I may have, mother? Mother—Yes, dear. Dot—Then, mother, will you please cut it in two pieces and give me one at a time?

Roy Stannard Baker's description of "The Great Northwest" are giving the men and women of the East a better understanding of the vastness and wealth of that wonderful region. The magnitude of the Northwest's forests and of its lumbering industry—Tacoma can boast the greatest sawmill, with one exception, in the world—will be the text of the fascinating story, in the May Century, of "The Conquest of the Forest."

THE HOW AND WHY.

Much you may have guessed about life insurance may be wrong. Mr. H. C. Lippincott, of Philadelphia, one of the most foremost insurance authorities of the age, has copyrighted a little book entitled "The How and Why." It has been adopted by several Eastern colleges to teach the first principles of life insurance, and may be had free by addressing Sherman and Harmon, general agents Penn Mutual Life Insurance Co., Murquham building, Portland, Or. It may help you to understand How and Why the Penn Mutual during 1902 wrote a larger amount of insurance in Oregon than was ever before written in the state by any company in one year.
