TWO TO ONE, BUT-

Perhaps no one, who followed closely the testimony in the Schley court of inquiry, is surprised at the findings of Admirals Benham and Ramsey. The pusillanimous character of the testimony for the prosecution, the paltry and flimsy nature of much of the criminating facts set forth, served to show fully the navy to be divided into two hostile camps, with a brass buttoned aristocracy of ball room and boudoir bumpkins on one side, and the fighting men of the navy on the other. Benham and Ramsey seem by their findings, flimsy and pharisacial as they are, to be possibly dominated by the naval social clique. Dewey, whose achievement at Manila will live as long as history is read or written, and who resigned the presidency of a Washington club in order to escape the buffeting of the social mob devoted to traducing Schley, speaks in his opinion as one of the fighters of the navy, guided by common sense and swayed by decent intelligence.

If Schley had lost at Santiago, if half the Spanish ships had escaped at Santiago, if he had lost the Brooklyn, or lost a thousand of his men, then a court of inquiry and the finding of adverse conclusions would have come within the limit of decency and propriety.

But he did not lose. He won, won a victory not less brilliant than that at Manila, won all, and more than all his country ever dared to hope for. To discredit him now is to discredit the fair the recital, vocal and instrumental, name of Americanism in the eyes given by Miss Philbrick, director of the world, to discredit the sacred of the musical department, and her ath and honest judgment of brave pupils.
