HENRY W. CORBETT.

THE WELL-KNOWN PORTLAND FINANCIER AND STATESMAN IS DEAD

Died Suddenly at His Home in Portland Tuesday Morning—Was at His Desk in the Bank the Day Before—His Career.

Portland, March 31.—Henry Winslow Corbett, ex-United States senator, and one of the most prominent citizens of Portland and the Northwest, passed suddenly away at his residence in this city at 6:45 o'clock this morning. At the time of his death Mr. Corbett was 76 years 1 month and 13 days of age. Surrounded by the immediate members of his family, the end of a long and industrious life came peacefully and almost without warning.

Yesterday morning Mr. Corbett attended to his customary duties at the First National Bank, of which he was president. He returned home a few minutes before noon and appeared much as usual, except complaining of drowsiness. During the afternoon he conversed with members of his family with usual spirit, but contrary to his custom he at intervals would relapse into short slumbers.

Dr. A. S. Nichols, the attending physician, called between 1 and 2 o'clock in the afternoon and discovered no alarming symptoms. At 5 o'clock the physician again visited the patient and advised that he retire and rest until today. The instructions were followed, and Mrs. Wendling, the nurse, was constantly near the bedside. Dr. Nichols remained at the Corbett residence the entire night and administered regularly medicines. Mr. Corbett slept with apparent comfort until 3 o'clock this morning, when he awoke and called for nourishment. He ate sparingly and again relapsed into slumber.

Shortly after daybreak this morning the nurse called Dr. Nichols, reporting to him that the patient's pulse was very weak. On arriving at the sick man's bedside it was apparent that a great change had come. Hardly a pulsation was noticeable. Hypodermics were administered without effect and at 14 minutes to 7 o'clock Henry W. Corbett died.

In the death chamber were Mrs. Corbett, Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Mason, the physician and the nurse. Mrs. Corbett and her brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Mason had been summoned by Dr. Nichols only a few moments before the end came. Death was due to the general breaking down of the nervous system, which caused weakness of the heart.

It was in the month of April, 52 years ago, that Mr. Corbett arrived at the village of Portland. It was composed of 400 people. On January 20, 1851, Mr. Corbett left via of the Panama route and landed at Astoria on March 4, 1851. At First and Oak streets he rented a small frame building and engaged in the mercantile business, having shipped a small stock of goods around Cape Horn for that purpose. His first enterprise here was to build the brick building which is now occupied by the firm of Corbett, Failing & Robertson, the wholesale hardware firm. Since the erection of this building the city has grown to a vast extent, and a number of magnificent business buildings at various locations in the city stand today, appropriate monuments to his enterprise.

His attention was early turned to the improvement of the water transportation facilities first enjoyed by Portland. He was the first to advocate the construction of the Northern Pacific transcontinental railroad. While he occupied a seat in the United States senate, he labored long and earnestly for the consummation of this great project.

In the winter of 1865-66, Mr. Corbett secured the government contract for carrying the mails between Portland and Sacramento. The line, some 600 miles in length, he stocked with four-horse stages. He successfully continued in this business until his election to the senate of the United States in 1867, when he relinquished his contract with the government, holding his connection with the business of mail carrying incompatible with his duties as a public servant.

In 1869, Mr. Corbett, in company with Mr. Failing, purchased a controlling interest in the First National Bank, an institution that had been established in Portland four years previous to the time Messrs. Corbett and Failing first became its financial heads. This is today the oldest and strongest First National Bank in the Pacific Northwest. After his retirement from the United States senate, Mr. Corbett became vice-president of the bank. Upon the death of Mr. Failing, Mr. Corbett became the president of the institution, and he has filled his duties there without interruption.

Aside from the bank, there are a large number of business and industrial enterprises with which he has been closely connected, having been instrumental in organizing corporations to found them, and furnishing largely the means by which these institutions were inaugurated. He was a director of the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company, he was largely interested in the Portland Cordage Works, one of the principal stockholders in the City & Suburban Railway Company, and other street railroads; also, stockholder and officer in other banking institutions. Mr. Corbett and Mr. Failing were backers of the magnificent enterprise which founded the Portland Hotel, which has helped materially to give Portland a reputation among the world's globe trotters, for there is no finer hostelry west of Chicago or Denver.

Private enterprises have always acknowledged liberal support from the president of the First National. One of his first endowments was the gift of $35,000 to the erection of the Presbyterian church, and large sums within the past few years to various eleemosynary institutions.

In politics Mr. Corbett was always an ardent and consistent republican. He was chairman of the republican state central committee back in 1862, and at different times his counsel and leadership have been sought by party managers. He was a candidate for election to the senate a second time in 1898, and was the choice of many republicans in 1901.

Originally Mr. Corbett was a whig and a devoted follower of Henry Clay. While in the senate Mr. Corbett's speeches on national finance and the funding bill are cherished by his colleagues as master pieces of logic, and he was warmly admired everywhere for his determined stand as senator against all measures which seemed to savor of bad faith on the part of the government, or the repudiation of any financial obligation which the United States had incurred to carry on the war.

Mr. Corbett was married first in February, 1853, to Miss Clara E. Jagger, of Albany, N. Y. This lady died some years later, leaving two sons, the younger of whom, Hamilton F. Corbett, was carried off by a sudden illness in 1884. The elder son, Henry J. Corbett, died in 1894.

Mr. Corbett was married a second time in 1867 to Miss Emma L. Ruggles, of Worcester, Mass., a lady of rare worth of character and strong mental inclinations, whose grace and social accomplishments and whose prominent part in charitable affairs of this city, has drawn to her a wide circle of friends who universally esteem her most highly.

The deceased was born at Westborough, Mass., February 18, 1827, and he was, therefore, 76 years, 1 month and 13 days old. His ancestors who settled in Massachusetts in the 17th century, were Normans who traced their descent from Roger Corbett, who was a military leader under William the first. His boyhood was passed in Washington county, New York, and his early years were attended with privations and hard work.

The immediate connections who survive the financier are: Mrs. Corbett, his wife; three grandsons, Harry Ladd Corbett, Elliott Ruggles Corbett, and Hamilton Corbett, and Helen Ladd Corbett, his daughter-in-law.

His estate is conservatively estimated at more than three million dollars, and the three children, grandchildren mentioned above will be the ultimate heirs.

Nothing for Charity but Millions for Mice to Mat—Another Girl's Fortune Buys Title and Beggar Earl.

New York, March, 31.—Countess D'Onigo, amiserer recluse, was murdered several weeks ago in her house near Trenio, says a dispatch from Rome to the American. The murderer, now a prisoner, has confessed the crime, declaring it was committed in a frenzy of rage at the countess because of her refusal to give him a meal or money for his starving children. The police found in the bedroom of the Countess bank notes aggregating $1,000,000. Five hundred one-thousand lire ($200,000) notes had been partly eaten by rats. The total value of the woman's estate is estimated at $4,000,000.

St. Petersburg, March 31.—The Severney Krai, reports the following: The man and his wife who left their native village near Vitepsk, a few days ago, to have their baby baptized at the nearest church were set upon by wolves. The man ordered his wife to throw the baby to the wolves. She refused and he attempted to tear the child from her arms. In the scuffle the mother fell out of the sleigh with the baby and they rolled, unnoticed by the wolves, into a ditch. The wolves kept up the pursuit and overtook and devoured the man and his horses.

Washington, April 1.—There is a clear case of bargain and sale in the marriage of Miss Thaw to Earl Yarmouth, announced to take place in Pittsburgh April 27th. The earl is penniless and the prospective bride is an heiress with $80,000 a year in her own right. The details of the settlement to be made on the earl in consideration of the taking of Miss Thaw as a bride have been the talk of the town.

The disagreement concerning the settlement to be made on the Earl of Yarmouth was settled by the intervention of Mrs. Thaw. She opposed the marriage, but has bowed to the inevitable. The trustees of Miss Thaw's fortune said some days ago that $25,000 a year would be sufficient for the earl. The earl thought he should have more, and there was a disagreement that at one time threatened to end the affair.

Mrs. Thaw went to the trustees of Miss Thaw's fortune and told them that Miss Thaw ought to have her full income, which is $80,000 a year. In addition Mrs. Thaw arranged for a further settlement which, it is understood here, will bring the entire resources of the earl and his wife to $100,000 a year.

Mrs. Thaw refused to tell what had been done, but said a satisfactory agreement had been reached.
