

WITH BIG JAW

PEOPLE AT BAKER CITY ARE VICTIMS OF FATAL CATTLE DISEASE.

Once Affected, Never Cured—Two in Hospital Now and Several Have Died.—Widower Takes Big Rag Doll for Wife—Art Gallery for Nation.

Baker City, Or., April 4.—A number of cases of lump jaw have developed in this city and county recently. It is not often that men and women are afflicted with this dread disease, which can only be contracted by eating diseased beef, but it is a fact that several people have died from lump jaw during the last eight or ten months.

There are two cases which have been diagnosed as lump jaw at the hospital in this city at the present time.

There is no known cure for the malady, once it is thoroughly developed. The patient always dies as in a case of malignant cancer.

It is certain that with a little effort the source of the disease can be traced in each case. Lump-jawed cattle cannot be mistaken. The outward sign of the disease is the appearance of a lump on the side and under the jaw, which continues in size until it becomes hideous in appearance and huge in proportions. In time it breaks and becomes a running sore, very offensive to the sight. It is more usually met with on the Eastern Oregon and Eastern Washington ranges than in the Willamette Valley.

In some localities it is known as the "big jaw." By some cattlemen it is considered as semi-contagious, and those of prudent turn of mind, always shoot the infected animal as soon as the character of the malady is first discovered. The animal, after it is attacked with the disease, soon begins to lose flesh, and if allowed to live, is finally reduced by the effect of the malady to skin and bone.

It is claimed that animals so afflicted, before the disease had reduced them too far in flesh, have been killed here and sold as beef to an unsuspecting public. A rigid investigation has been instituted, and no effort will be spared to bring the guilty parties to justice, though difficulties to be encountered in the process of detection will be manifold.

Watertown, N. Y., April 4.—Carrying in his arms a huge rag doll dressed in the clothing of his dead wife, Jerry Mooney, a farmer living near the village of Montagus, Lewis county, goes to his work in the fields each day.

For fifteen years, ever since his wife, Molly, died of paralysis, Mooney has carried this dummy about with him. He refuses to believe his wife is dead. After her burial he made a rag woman and dressed it in his wife's clothes.

He often places the figure in the favorite chair of his wife and spends long evenings before the fire talking to it. At meal times he draws the chair containing the figure up to the table and helps it to food. On Sundays he dresses the figure in the best clothes his wife had at her death, gets out all of her jewelry and places it about the neck and on the hands of the doll.

Week days when he goes to the field, the rag doll is carried by him and placed under the shelter of a tree in summer or in some protected spot in cold weather. He always carries luncheon for himself and the doll, and never eats the latter's portion.

Mooney and his wife came from Londonderry, in the north of Ireland, in the early fifties and settled on a small farm. They were rigid Covenanters, and, having no children, lived by themselves. When his wife died in 1888, neighbors, not seeing her about, called at the house and found her dead in bed and her husband sitting by the side of the body talking to her.

Mooney will permit no one to enter his house. The existence of the rag woman was discovered by persons who watched the house and saw him carrying it back and forth.

New York, April 4.—There is excellent authority for stating that J. Pierpont Morgan is planning to build a splendid art museum and present it to the American nation. Mr. Morgan's private collections are by far the rarest and most extensive owned by any individual in the world.

The most valuable of the treasures of this magnificent collector are now abroad, scattered over Continental Europe and England. That bete noia of American art collectors —the tariff—has so far estopped Mr. Morgan from transporting his art objects to this country. If he was to give his treasures to a public institution they could be brought in free of duty.

It was learned yesterday from one of Mr. Morgan's friends that the ambition of Mr. Morgan is to create a great art institution which shall be monumental in scope and which shall contain the very cream of the available art objects of the world. The addition which Mr. Morgan is now making to his home on Madison avenue and Thirty-sixth street will contain but a small part of his art collections.

"This much can be said definitely," said one of Mr. Morgan's friends, "and that is Mr. Morgan is by nature one of the most philanthropic men in the world. He has not made his vast collections with a view to keeping them secluded for the personal enjoyment of himself and his friends, but he cherishes the ambition of making his collection the most beautiful and valuable in the world."

"Mr. Morgan is today the greatest art collector in the world. He has spent more money for art objects probably than the dozen other most lavish collectors in the world combined. He is a man of rare taste and expert judgment. As an art critic he has few equals, and he has gathered together hundreds of marvellously beautiful things."

"It is the desire of the owner of these objects that they shall be made available for the American people. He is planning to house all his collections in some one place and it is very likely that the great museum of art which he will establish will be offered as a gift to the American nation, or be made the foundation of a great national art gallery."

Mr. Morgan's visits to Europe every summer have been devoted quite as much to the purchase of art objects as to the transaction of his banking business. In the last seven years he is believed to have purchased fully $7,000,000 worth of art treasures in Europe.

Berlin, April 3.—Because Baron Von Sternberg, Germany's ambassador to the United States, went to the Washington depot to say good-bye to his friend, President Roosevelt, the German newspapers waxed wroth at their representative, and accused him of several kinds of betrayal of the fatherland.

To the American residents in the city the situation is rather funny. The German newspapers, at least the larger and most influential, this morning attack Baron Von Sternberg unmercifully. They charge him with trailing the dignity of the empire in the dust of Republicanism. They declare that he has been unmindful of his duty as the representative of the "greatest power in Europe," and has deliberately subjected the Kaiser and the Kaiser's subject's to humiliation.

The tone of the German press on this really trivial incident is strongly condemnatory of the baron. The articles, evidently inspired, say that Von Sternberg, in going to the depot to say good-bye to Roosevelt, was servile. He is represented as "trucking to the president of a mob."

The newspapers assume a lofty tone of injured dignity and declare that the Kaiser has been made ridiculous by this friendly act of his representative at Washington.

Washington, D. C., April 3.—Judge Charles E. Corey, of Portland, Or., has been recommended by Senator John H. Mitchell, Senator Charles W. Fulton and Congressman J. N. Williamson as the successor of ex-Governor P. Lord, who is now serving as United States minister to the Argentine republic.

SEVERE ATTACK OF GRIP.

Cured by One Bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

"When I had an attack of the grip last winter (the second one) I actually cured myself with one bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy," says Frank W. Perry, Editor of the Enterprise Shortsville N. Y. "This is the honest truth. I at times kept from coughing myself to pieces by taking a teaspoonful of this remedy, and when the coughing spell would come on at night I would take a dose and it seemed that in the briefest interval the cough would pass off and I would go to sleep perfectly free from cough and its accompanying pains. To say that the remedy acted as a most agreeable surprise is putting it very mildly. I had no idea that it would or could knock out the grip simply because I had never tried it for such a purpose, but it did and it seemed with the second attack a coughing the remedy caused it to not only be of less duration but the pains were far less severe and I had not used the contents of one bottle before Mr. Grip had bid me adieu." SURE THING GAME.

HOW THOSE WHO PLAY IT IN ORATORICAL CONTESTS WIN THE BIG PRIZE.

Orator Smith Censured, his College Under the ban and Oratory Besmirched—An Original Poem—At Philomath Other Local News.

Orator Smith, who carried away first honors and a big gold medal at the late oratorical contest at Eugene is under a shadow now and oratorical contests in Oregon are in as bad repute as are senatorial elections in Delaware. It has been discovered either that Orator Smith stole a lot of his oration from Senator Vance of North Carolina, or that Senator Vance stole his lecture from Orator Smith, and as he delivered his speech first, not much suspicion attaches to the senator. The executive committee of the oratorical association has censured Smith, and has debarred McMinnville College, which he represented, from participation in next year's oratorical contest. The latter fact, coupled with that wild burst of pride on the evening of the Eugene contest, when the McMinnville delegation leaped to the platform and bore the victorious Smith off in triumph on their shoulders, is about as great a contrast in situations as it is possible to imagine. The man who married the widow's daughter and then eloped with the widow herself made no more of a sensation or put the climax of joy and shame in more complete juxtaposition. Everybody probably feels sorry for Smith, for he is said to be a hardworking, good fellow; but then there is his offense, which only differs from that of the man who gets in jail in that he steals bread while Smith stole his speech.

The address from which the McMinnville orator got his material is a lecture entitled "The Scattered Nation," to be found in volume six of Modern Eloquence, sentences bodily or with little change of phrase, thoughts clothed in the exact words of Senator Vance, and whole paragraphs, more or less abridged appear in Smith's "The Homeless Nation," just as they did in the original. The plan of the two speeches are identical. The comparison suggests the idea that if more time had been allowed the McMinnville orator for delivery he would have swiped the North Carolinian's speech bodily.

A most interesting feature of the discovery is that if Smith's theft hadn't won out at the contest, the representative of Newberg College would have been winner, for she stood second. The fact is made thrilling by the incident that for an exactly similar theft by the Newberg College orator two years ago, the McMinnville orator would have taken first place. The Newberg literary pirate then was Elwood Minchin, who delivered at Corvallis an oration entitled "Wendell Phillips the Agitator," taking first honors over J. Sherman Wallace, the McMinnville representative, who stood second. The next day after the oration was printed, Joseph Underwood of Corvallis, brought out of his library a book entitled "Wendell Phillips, the agitator," and it was found, as in the present instance, not only many of the sentences bodily, but all of the Newberg man's oration. The book turned out to be a worse agitator than Wendell Phillips ever dared to be, though in that instance, the executive committee did not censure Minchin, as it now does Smith.

So it has been between these two schools that she piracy has been practiced, and in each instance, the chickens have come home to roost. The Newberg girl of this year ought to have Smith's medal and honors, and the McMinnville orator of two years ago, ought to have the medal and honors that were bestowed on the Newberg representative of that year. There is no doubt that the failure to properly punish the offense of two years ago, is responsible for that of this year.

Meantime, the colleges in the association that played fair, are struck dumb with knowledge that they have been up against a sure thing game. They are in the position of the thousands who have bet and lost their money on the shell game at the circus, where there was no possible show to win. Many an old mare would have won in the horse race but for the rider, just as some of the Webfoot orators would have been in the finish but for the books and published speeches. Minchin on the shoulders of his compatriots at the close of the contest here in Corvallis, and Smith similarly elevated at Eugene was a dream of glory that the honest orators beheld all dazed. It came round that way because Minchin and Smith, like the man with the shells at the circus, played the game to skin—and skun.

The meeting of the executive committee at which the action against Smith and McMinnville college was taken, was held at Forre Grove, Friday. Louis Burroughs is the member of the committee from OAC but was unable to attend. The vote by which Smith was censured and his college debarred from next year's contest was unanimous. The wonder now naturally is, have any other thefts occurred that have not been discovered?

The Contented Sweet-briar.

(By Florence Connor.)

Complacent by a dreary path,
A lovely sweet-briar grew,
And wafted round her fragrance rich
And beautified the view.

A peaceful glory seemed to grace
Each witching charm of June,
And in her midst some songsters gay
Trilled forth a merry tune.

"Pray tell me, rose," I said to her,
"Are you content to stay
And waste thy beauty here that would Adorn some garden gay?"

She said, "If such be God's own will
To give me lowly lot,
I am content here to stay
To grace this lonely spot.

"For drear indeed were places lone
If all we flowers grew
To beautify but gardens fair,
Where all is pleasing view.

"Methinks some one would pass un-
cheered
Along this pathway drear
Some bird would hush its warbled strain
To see no blossoms here.

"So my life, though wasted deemed,
Shall not be lived in vain,
If some good deed I here can do;
But counted truest gain."

Ah, thou, O patient genius grand!
In some scarce trodden sphere,
Art thou not like this way-side rose,
To give forth thou good cheer?

For sad it were didst know that God
Who lit thy lonely flame
If all the gifted only graced
The lofty heights of Fame.
