—Why it was done, nobody knows. It was one of those acts of pure cussedness that is without excuse and beyond explanation. Somebody did it between six o'clock Saturday night and the same hour on Sunday. The rope that swings the gravel ferry boat to the big wire cable and hold it on its course as the boat crosses and recrosses the river is not metallic. With a pocket knife, somebody cut two strands of it and nearly severed a third, expecting no doubt that as the boat struck the current the remaining strand would part and the craft with its load of gravel teams be left to drift down stream. What the outcome might have been is only conjecture. Fortunately, however, parties on the boat Sunday afternoon, discovered the cut, and reported the fact to Chief Lane, and a new rope was provided in time for the boat to be used by the gravel teams when they began hauling Monday morning.
