MUTILATED MONEY.

How the Government Restores Injured Bills and Coin.

States Is Prequently Attempted, and Sometimes with Success-Curlous Cases

There are several experts employed by the government to inspect the cur-rency offered for redemption. In fact, every person employed in the bureau is in some degree an expert, because one of them has to pass on the genuineness of the money presented for redemp-tion, and this is a difficult task. Remember, that this money comes to the treasury, as a rule, only when it is so badly worn that it will not pass current. This dirty, torn, greasy, ragged money the experts have to handle and decide whether it was issued by the government and should be redeemed at its face value or whether it is the work of counterfeiters and should be rejected. It is not at all to the discredit of the experts of the bureau that some begus money has got past them and been detected in one of the offices to which the pieces of the money go for urther examination. This does not occur often.

The peculiar province of one woman s not to detect bad money—though she s an expert at that—but to put together torn pieces of money sent for dentification and redemption. These pieces of money come from all parts of the country and arrive under most extraordinary conditions. This is not surprising, in view of the fact that come from experiences with fire and water and gastric juices and many other powereful agents. A not infrequent accident to money is to be left in a stove, whence it is taken in a badly charred condition, with only ashes to represent the greater part of it. Often it is used by rats to make their nests; or, buried in the dampness of a cellar, it rots away; or, swallowed by a cow, it is rescued from her stomach a slimy ass of paper. Here are the rules of the treasury for the redemption of mutilated money: For a piece of currency greater than two-fifths of the original note, one-half the face value of the note is given. For a piece as great as three-fifths, the whole value of the note is given. For a piece two-fifths in size of the original nothing is given. But this last provision is limited by the law, which gives discretion to the treasury department to give full value for a note if the owner can prove to the satisfaction of the authorities that the note, or the missing part of it was destroyed. This last provision opens the door to possible fraud, and many are the efforts made by dishonest persons to take advantage of it.

The fragments of money which come to the treasury are turned over to one of the experts and sorted out under the microscope for identification. They are picked apart and each tiny piece is assigned to its place like a part of a puzzle. This is usually done on glass, and the fragments are eventually put between pieces of glass to hold them together while they are measured to see whether there are two-fifths or three fifths of the note identifiable, or whether it is so little that the owner can recover nothing. Sometimes it is a very serious matter to the owner; but in about $1,000 in mutilated currency. out of which it was able to identify for reduception all but a fraction of the

Some of the experiences of the redemotion division with would-be thicks are interesting. One man in Kan as sent to the treasury the halves of some small bills with the edges nicely charred, accompanied by an affidavit from the sender that he had put the money in his pocket, hung his cost on a fence and that the coat had been burned to the destruction of part of the notes. It happened that the treasury had redeemed the other halves of these notes just 21/2 years before for a money broker in New York, and, thinking the case suspicious, had kept an eye out for the possibility of attempted fraud. The Kansas man was a person of good business standing, and his bankers threatened the treasury officials with dismissal if they questioned his affidavit. They put the case in the hands of the department of justice and eventually the man pleaded guilty and was fined $1,000.

A bank in Alabama received from a depositor a fragment of a ten-dollar bill, and the treasury people paid five dollars for it. Later came a claim ac-companied by the other part of the bill. a little charred, with an affidavit saying the sender had burned the remainder of the note by mistake.

A Chicago man sent in fragments of two $20 bills and one ten-dollar bill, with an affidavit telling how the other halves had been destroyed; and in the same mail the other halves of these notes came in from a Chicago bank. A special agent caught the maker of the affidavit, who proved to be the tool of some swindlers, and he was sent to prison for a year and a half .- Wash-
