(Advertisements in this column charged for at the rate of 1 cent per line.)

—New invoice of street hats just received at Mrs. J. Mason's.

—A. Peterson returned Monday from a trip to Condon, whither he had been summoned for consultation upon an extensive building proposition.

—Harry B. Smith, sporting editor of the Evening Telegram arrives today to witness the football game.

—There is general comment among Corvallisites relative to the amount of building that is still going on in the city, despite the fact that the season for such work is practically past for this year. A local contractor, in summing up the situation this week, named eight residences that are yet under construction about town; while additions and other improvements are so numerous that to enumerate them would be "well nigh" impossible.

—In Philomath College a week from tomorrow, Bishop Castle is to preach the funeral sermon of the late Mrs. Jacob Henkle. The occasion will be one of wide interest in the vicinity. The deceased was an oldtime and widely known woman in the community. On her death bed she requested that Bishop Castle perform this last service. The speaker will be worthy of the event. He has been 28 years a bishop in the United Brethren church. He is the ranking bishop in that church, and he is withal a powerful, profound and eloquent pulpiteer.

—At the residence of G. R. Hall, near Belfountain Sunday, there was a pretty home wedding, the bride being Miss Mamie Tozier, and the groom, Eric Hall. The ceremony was performed at high noon, Rev. M. M. Waltz, officiating. Only relatives and a small party of friends were present. The presents received were handsome. In the evening the young couple were serenaded by all of Belfountain, Mr. and Mrs. Hall are both highly respected young people of Benton county, and many friends unite in congratulations and good wishes.

—W. L. Douglas, who is known the world over as the head of the Douglas shoe factory, was elected governor of Massachusetts by an immense democratic majority, while the state went for Roosevelt by a large majority. Douglas, it is evident, is rather a remarkable person, having acknowledged ability such as is required by the executive of a great state, and ability such as is required by the head of one of the greatest manufacturing plants in the world. He began life for himself at the shoe bench, and while he is not an old man he now controls a business, the sales of which last year amounted to six and a half million dollars.

—Newton Adams had his innings in the way of good fortune this week. Mr. Adams is a student of the Scranton International Correspondence school, taking the course of architectural drawing. The territory west of the Willamette river is under the supervision of N. W. Kelloway, with headquarters in Portland. Each month a $25 prize is offered to the student who makes the closest guess as to the number of examination papers that are corrected from his section, by the correspondence school. The only condition was, that the guess must be accompanied by the name of a new student, secured by the guesser. Mr. Adams sent in the name of a new pupil and accompanied it by a guess as to the number of examination papers sent in from this district. His estimate was 59989, and the correct number was 58858. His estimate being the nearest, Mr. Adams will receive $25 worth of books, comprising a concise encyclopedia of the course of the Scranton school. The work is called the Library of Technology

FIRED AT BURGLAR.

Whie Latter Robbed Saloon—Bullet Found its Mark.

While in the act of burglarizing the Wuestefelt saloon in the early hours of Thursday morning, a sneak thief was discovered and fired at by Officer Osburn. Bloody marks in the path of his flight indicate that the thief was hit, but he made his escape, and is now in hiding. The belief is general that he has a severe if not a serious wound, and the fact is relied upon to drive the fugitive out of cover through need for medical assistance or other aid. Several facts conspire to convince the police that they know the identity of the man, and they are engaged in an active search for him with much hope of effecting a capture. Besides the attempted burglary and its prompt discovery at Wuestefelt's, the man also entered and ransacked the public school buildings, and paid a visit to the rooms of Charles Shenofield in the Occidental Hotel, where a revolver was stolen.

The shooting at the Wuestefelt saloon happened at about quarter past two o'clock Thursday morning. At the moment, the burglar was on his haunches behind the counter and in the act of rummaging among the contents of a low cupboard built beneath the shelving along the south wall. Officer Osburn was at the front window about fifteen feet from where the burglar was crouched. A tiny round hole in the window pane shows where the bullet from the officers weapon started on its flight, and another in a glass four feet further back, or at the rear of the show window indicates the course of the ball. The burglar's right hand, as he crouched, was inside the cupboard, and his left which was extended downward nearly to the floor, clutched a revolver. His back was toward the window where the officer stood, though turned slightly sidewise, and presented a fair mark for a bullet. He was deeply intent on his work and the report of the revolver at the window, must have been the first warning to him that he was being watched in his operations.

NOISES WITHIN.

On account of the lateness of the hour, the streets were deserted. The saloons had all closed at midnight, and no one save the night officer, had been astir since that hour. As is the case in several business establishments, an electric light burns all night in the Wuestefelt saloon. It is the habit of Officer Osburn in his rounds at night to take a look into every place as he passes. A Harper whiskey sign in the window at Wuestefelt's made it necessary to step up on the iron foot plate below the window in order to get a full view of the interior. In order to do this the officer had to seize hold of the iron grating in front of the window, and it was while standing in this uneasy position that his shot was delivered.

A noise from within, assisted the officer in detecting the presence of his quarry. At first it seemed to be on the south side, and then at the north side. It gave the impression that there were two men or more in the room, and caused the officer to look in at both windows. It has since developed that there was a cat in the room, and the latter is supposed to have been responsible for the second disturbance.

THE BURGLAR FELL.

The thief gained entrance through a window in the rear of the building. At first he tried the transom over the west door, and there he succeeded in tearing away a portion of the wire netting back of the transom, but eventually he gave up entrance at that point as too difficult. Then he turned his attention to the window, which he approached on low sheds in the rear. He used a chisel taken from the public school building earlier in the evening. The tool has since been identified as his own by Mr. Hotchkiss, janitor of the public school, and has been restored to him. With it, the thief pried up the window with such force as to tear out the screws of the fastening at the top of the sash, and thereafter entrance was easy. His approach to the window was possible from several directions over the low sheds, and his escape in any of these directions fully as easy. It was on this account, that Officer Osburn, familiar with the situation as a result of investigation of a former burglary in the adjoining Huston establishment, determined to attack with his weapon from the front. When he fired, the burglar seemed to drop, and for a second there was a shuffling noise. Then all was still, and the impression gained that the shot had been fatal.

THREE GOT AWAY.

Then there was a noise on the north side of the building. It was doubtless the cat, but the officer suspected it to be another man. It was impossible now to see longer through the window into which the weapon had been discharged. The smoke from the gun obscured the interior completely from view. Osburn however, clung for several seconds to the iron grating in the effort to observe further developments, and then ran to the north window. Nothing could be seen from there, and he endeavored to burst in the front door. Several attempts were made, but the fastenings refused to yield. Then the officer ran to the telephone office next door and requested the operator to notify Wuestefelt and Chief Lane of what had occurred, and hastening around the block, he entered the alley in the rear. Here, he knew however, that escape could be made in many directions, including a passage through the back yard of the Greffoz jewelry store, so after an ineffectual search for a few minutes, he hurried to the Independent telephone office for a second summons for assistance. Chief Lane and Mr. Wuestefelt soon arrived, and the rest of the morning was spent in a fruitless search for the fugitive. The departing early trains were all visited but no suspicious passengers were among those that left.

BLOOD WAS FOUND.

It is certain that the burglar was hit. It is believed that the wound is severe. Many blood marks were found at the window through which he passed after the shooting. The bullet holes in the window panes give the exact course the ball took. With this as a basis, the direction shows the body of the crouching burglar to have been within exact range. It also shows where the bullet would have struck the floor had its passage not been obstructed. No mark of the bullet is anywhere to be found in the floor or elsewhere, and it is the belief of officers that the burglar has it in his body. The weapon used was a .38-calibre. It is the same weapon that James Dunn used in the tragedy on the streets of Corvallis last April.

THEY KNOW HIM.

The police are convinced that they know the identity of the wounded burglar. Officer Osburn got a partial view of his face. There was a mustache, light in color and not very heavy. There was considerable growth of beard that gave the lower face a dirty appearance. The man was in the saloon Wednesday afternoon and evening. He was nowhere to be found the morning after the shooting. He has not since been seen. He is a man with a bad reputation, who has had trouble in several places during the 25 or 26 years that he has lived. In the main, he is a tramp, though at times he has been known to work for a livelihood. It is not believed that he is far away, and the officers have strong hopes of effecting a capture.

THE OTHER ROBBERIES.

In the Occidental robbery, it is supposed that the same thief figured. The place was entered between nine and ten o'clock in the evening. The thief had a feast on canned fruit, oysters and other edibles, and then took a revolver and box of cartridges from the room of Charles Shenofield, the only occupant of the place. At the school house, the thief attempted to gain entrance by climbing the tin eaves-trough, but it broke and let him fall. Then he went to the old building which he entered, and there after breaking a few locks and unlocking others, he found the chisel in a closet, and with it effected his entrance to the saloon. The only booty that he is known to have secured is the revolver and shells, a Canadian shilling taken from the till at the saloon, and a nickel taken from a child's purse at the school building. The purse had been found by the janitor, and as yet no owner had claimed it. It contained only the nickel.
